The First Consideration.

At St. Andrews some years ago an old farmer and his plowman were carting sand from the seashore. They were behind the target on the rifle range, but hidden by a bank of sand from a party of volunteers, who were then on foot, at practice. A stray bullet struck the plowman on the leg, and he immediately dropped, exclaiming: "I'm shot!"

Without more ado the farmer scrambled up the bank and, waving his hand to the volunteers, shouted:

"Hey, lads, stop that, will ye? You've shot a man, and it micht hae been the horse!"—London Tit-Bits.

Four Dollars for a Cake of Soap.

Soap has never been considered an extravagance, but now that notion may change, since the new French imported soaps are costing from two to three and four dollars a cake. They are, however, deliciously scented, and one may take pardonable pleasure in using such toilet article. Each cake comes in a little box, and is satin covered; they are quite a suitable item for the traveling bag of the bride, for which the most exquisite trifles are always sought out.

JULY FOURTH CELEBRATION.

Editor Union and Banner:

Dear Sir—Allow us a few lines in your paper to let everybody know what a good time they can have on the Fourth of July.

The Thorsby Concert Band has arranged an elaborate program for that date.

There will be three baseball games during the day, one in the forenoon and two in the afternoon. Cash prizes will be given the winning team of each game.

At 8 o'clock p. m. a great display of fireworks will be given.

Concerts will be given during the day and evening by the band.

Dear Editor:

The health of this community is very good at present. The farmers are getting along fine with their crops. They are now looking forward for a summer vacation from their regular work. The young people are looking forward to a future life. They are showing it by their actions in having a good society started again. This society will meet at this place next Saturday night, June 29th, for the purpose of having a debate and some nice recitations. Everybody is invited to come and enjoy this meeting.

It is now well known that not more than one case of rheumatism in ten requires any internal treatment whatever. All that is needed is a free application of Chamberlain's Liniment and massaging the parts at each application. Try it and see how quickly it will relieve the pain and soreness. Life of the Soil.

The soil may be said to be alive. It is a matrix supporting various groups of definite micro-organisms, and the investigations of the past few years indicate the possibility of determining by bacteriological diagnoses the crop-producing capacities of different soils. It has been shown by the action of nitrifying bacteria, especially in samples of soil, correlates fairly well with the productiveness of the same soils under field conditions. — Harper's Weekly.

FLAVORING THE MEAT

NECESSITY WITH ALMOST ANY KIND OF COOKING.

Most Housewives Have Their Own Ideas of What Is Best—Those Who Are Anxious to Try Something Else Will Find It Here.

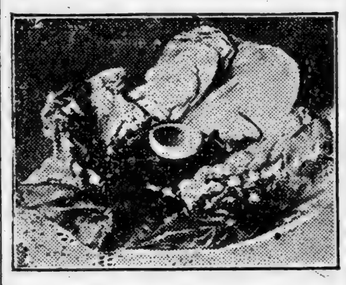
Next to the unchanged flavor of meat itself comes the flavor secured by browning the meat with fat, as in roasted meats. But additional flavors are used by all cooks. Lean, insipid meat is enriched with butter and meat extract. Very rich meat is balanced with starchy vegetables or pungent ones like shallots, onions and garlic, or peppers, chillis and herbs. Some of the following condiments will be found in a well-stocked cupboard: Celery tops and parsley (either fresh or dried), sage, summer savory, celery salt, thyme, bay leaves, tarragon vinegar, curry powder, cloves, pepper corns, clam extract, onion salt, beef extract, chili, pepper and horse radish sauce.

Soups, stews, braised meats and pot roasts are improved if the flavoring vegetables are first fried and then added to the meat. This need not increase the number of utensils used, for the meat is usually seared over before it is cooked, and one pan will do for both vegetables and meat.

Onion salt is a new condiment that is very satisfactory, but onion juice may be extracted from a peeled onion by pressing the dull edge of a knife against one side of the vegetable. When peppers are used, always remove the seed and the white membrane, then chop or shred. If very sharp soak in cold water. Bay leaf in small quantities is a pleasant flavor for all meat dishes, but it is usually added in such quantity as to give a strong taste, like varnish, to the food. One-half a bay leaf is enough for three quarts of soup stock. Bay leaf is liked particularly for tomato sauce, bouillon and other tomato dishes.

A horse radish sauce to use with boiled beef is made by adding grated horse radish and a little vinegar to whipped cream. Or thicken a little of the stock in which the meat was cooked and add the horse radish to this with a little butter. Capers are served with boiled mutton.

TOMATO JELLY SALAD.



Season to taste one pint of hot, strained tomato sauce and add one tablespoon of dissolved gelatine. Pour into small round mouulds and when hard, turn out on crisp, lettuce leaves. Garnish with slices of hard-boiled egg and finely chopped cucumbers. Serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Invalid Cake.

When the invalid is able to take a cup of tea in the afternoon a little piece of cake is not only appetizing but nourishing. The following is a very good recipe for invalid cake:

Cream two ounces of butter and two ounces of sugar together. Beat up two eggs for ten minutes and add them and three ounces of flour alternately to the creamed butter and sugar, beating well all the time with a wooden spoon. The flour should be sifted in. Add the grated rind of half a lemon and a quarter of a teaspoonful of baking powder. Pour the mixture into a well buttered and papered cake tin and bake in a moderate oven for three-quarters of an hour.

Apple Dumpling.

Mix four cupfuls of flour, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar and one of soda, by sifting two or three times. Rub in a lump of butter the size of a walnut, stir in two cupfuls of sour milk, turn out on the board and work into a smooth dough. Roll out thin, and cut in four-inch squares. Put half of an apple in each one, bring the corners together; steam and bake about one-half hour. Serve with cream and sugar if baked, and with boiled or hard sauce is steamed.

Snow Balls.

Take some good cooking apples; try and select all one size; peel evenly; scoop out the core, and into each hole put a small piece of butter; fill up with sugar; butter a tin and bake apples until tender, but do not let them break. Now when cool, roll gently in a little golden syrup and then in finely grated cocoanut, when they will look like pretty white balls. The syrup causes the cocoanut to adhere better. These are delicious and cheap.

Potato Dumplings.

Take mashed potatoes, seasoned as for the table (cold ones will do as well); to two cups potatoes add one egg and flour enough to make stiff dough; roll the same as biscuit dough and cut with knife or biscuit cutter and put in any kind of soup. Chicken

Bowels are Basis of Child Heal

The careful mother, who watches closely the physical peculiarities of her children, will soon discover that the most important thing in connection with a child's constant good health is to keep the bowels regularly open. Sluggish bowels will be followed by loss of appetite, restlessness during sleep, irritability and a dozen and one similar evidences of physical disorder.

At the first sign of such disorder give the child a teaspoonful of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at night on retiring and repeat the dose the following night if necessary—more than that will scarcely be needed. You will find that the child will recover its accustomed good spirits at once and will eat and sleep normally.

This remedy is a vast improvement over salts, cathartics, laxative waters and similar things, which are altogether too powerful for a child. The h Mrs. Geo. CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Union:

Please permit me to say a few words through the columns of your paper in regard to the Sunday School Convention, which was held with New Cedran Baptist Church, June 30th.

Regardless of teh bad weather, the people began gathering early and kept coming till there was barely space for another buggy on the church yard.

The convention was called to order by the President, Prof. T. E. Williams, at 9:35 a. m. Soon afterwards the house was filled while a number were left standing in the rear and at the windows on either side.

The schools were well represented and much interest was manifested throughout the entire day. All who were on the program were present, with the exception of three, whose places were ably filled by Brother W. B. Crumpton, Miss Mabel Jones and Brother T. J. Deason.

"We, this convention, thank the people of New Cedran and community for their royal welcome and generous hospitality during this convention.

"(MISS) MARGARETTE WOOD,
"Secretary."

PROVIDENCE.

Children's Day exercises at Oak Ridge was the attraction for our young folks last Sunday. A good many went down and reported an enjoyable time.

By the way, these all-day singings and other special occasions around are playing havoc with our Sunday school. We hope to see more interest, both by old and young.

The quarterly meeting the first of week was held at Mt. Moriah with a pretty good attendance.

Visitors for the week end, Will and Claib Sims of Birmingham.

The Providence ball team went down to Mars Hill last Saturday to show them how to play ball, but were rained out in the first half of the seventh inning in favor of Mars Hill.

The Possum Hollow team came over to play our second team, but were rained out in the first inning.

Mrs. W. A. Sims and Pattie were visitors at Minooka last Sunday.

Plenty of showers lately, but cotton needs warmer weather. Corn is doing fine.

PECULIAR PRAYER TO COURT

"They say that a lawyer has been saved by his stenographer," said an attorney, at a recent lecture. "That is true, undoubtedly, because a lawyer's stenographer, who is observing, gets many points of law out of her work.

"But there is another side to it that must not be overlooked, and that is the mistakes that a lawyer's stenographer makes. The law terms are so technical that it is not within reason to expect the stenographer to get everything exactly right.

"One of the most amusing errors that I have ever heard of in connection with stenographic errors, if I may call it that, occurred in a certain law office the other day. The case was a divorce action, in which the plaintiff alleged cruel and inhuman treatment.

"Plaintiff, being a woman with all the common law disabilities, prayed the court for temporary alimony and suit money. The prayer was dictated to the stenographer and she wrote it out and mailed it to the court.

"Shortly afterward, the lawyer chanced to read a copy and found to his horror that the stenographer had made the prayer one for alimony and soup money."

What the Backward Child Needs.

The backward child can hardly ever be helped in a private school, however excellent it may be, because what the backward child needs is not coaching but expert observation and diagnosis.—From Rheta Childe Dorr's "The Child That Is Different," in the Century.

GREAT REMEDIES

Andes' Great Prescription and Andes' Great Oil have never been handled or sold by any of the drug stores in Clanton before. These Great Remedies are just now being introduced into the State of Alabama for the first time, and are now offered to the people as an absolute, positive, perfect and guaranteed cure for catarrh, indigestion and rheumatism, acting specifically on the liver and kidneys, curing backache and purifying the blood.

Andes' Great Remedies Are Not Offered As a CURE-ALL but they are offered to the people as an absolute, perfect, positive guaranteed cure for the above named diseases when taken and used as directed. The cures resulting from the use of these GREAT REMEDIES are most wonderful, speedy and remarkable. They are the greatest medical discovery of this generation for the above-named diseases, and this notice is simply given to inform the people that these GREAT REMEDIES can now be had at the store of the UPCHURCH DRUG CO., CLANTON, ALA.

MAPLE SPRINGS.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Here we come asking for space in your valuable paper to say a few words.

Health is fairly good at present except some few cases of "heart trouble." Think they will soon be all right.

Everybody seemed to have a lively time Sunday at Bethel and Chestnut, especially D. S. M., Misses C. W. W. and Leola.

Mr. J. M. P. seemed to have a nice time Saturday night. But, alas, Poor Bud lay in the buggy asleep while his cousin talked to the girl. But was all smiles Sunday.

Messrs. S. W. Mims, Jodie Mims, C. N. Kicker were visitors at Bethel from Birmingham Sunday.

Mr. Tommie Parrish and wife, from Birmingham, attended the singing at Chestnut Sunday.

Mr. J. L. M. looked lonesome all day, but carried his little girl, E. G. W. home Sunday evening.

Miss Effie Askins and parents visited relatives near Maple-Saturday and Sunday.

Everybody is expecting a lively time the Fourth. Hope they will succeed.

Heard the Falakto ball team was going to play Verbena and Mountain Creek the Fourth. Hope they will have a jolly time.

Well, guess we had better "hush" for this time. Will come again if this misses the waste basket.

Bst of wishes for the Union and Banner.

BALL PLAYER.

Impressive "I."

"A public man should endeavor to impress his meaning in as simple and direct a fushion as possible. He should make a practice of using words of one syllable." "I go further than that," replied the energetic statesman. "I depend almost entirely on the brief and beautiful word of the letter."

Original Sextet.

"I wonder who really made up that original sextet we hear so much about?" "The original sextet was composed of Helen of Troy, Sappho, Cleopatra, Mme. du Barry, Lucretia Borgia and Delilah. They were all trouble-makers."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A. B. Nason, farming near Nason, Ky., was badly crippled with sciatic rheumatism due he says to uric acid in his blood. "Foley Kidney Pills entirely cured me and I recommend numerous black specks that were before my eyes." Foley Kidney Pills are a safe acid antiseptic and are effective for the various forms of rheumatism. Upchurch Drug Company.

ENTERPRISE.

Farmers are getting along fine with their work. Health is very good. I haven't heard of any one being sick for the past few days. Some of our people attended the F. E. C. U. of A. at Evergreen Thursday and report a nice time. The services at Bethel Sunday were good. Quite a number of the folks went to the singing at Bethel Sunday and had a nice time. Prof. B. F. Boockholdt returned home Saturday from Newton where he has been in school for some time. Guess he will be engaged in teaching at Hampton Schoolhouse for the next two months.

With a few little showers of rain the past week crops are growing nicely although we have not had a good season yet. Thursday being the 4th of July we hope everybody will celebrate the day in honor of our flag. Seems that people have stopped talking politics now. Prof. Denis and J. Z. Mims are chosen for teachers at Enterprise for this winter, both prominent teachers of Chilton.

MARS HILL.

Editor Union and Banner:

The health of this community is very good at present with the exception of Miss Lucy Foshee, who has been quite ill. We hope for her a speedy recovery.

We had a nice ball game Saturday. Providence visited Mars Hill. The scare was 11 to 6 in favor of aMrs Hill. On account of rain only seven innings were played. Game pitched by T. C. Cofer, D. Scott and H. C. Sims. D. Scott did nice work for the Mars Hill team. R. R. Scott is beginning to come again with his four base hits.

Come on Providence and play ball. You have one of the best teams in the county and you play a fair game. Mars Hill has played nine games; won six and lost three.

"Moonshining" in Scotland.

The discovery was made, recently, in the mountainous region near Kyle of Lochalsh (Scotland) by the Rosshire preventive staff of a complete illicit whisky distilling plant. The still was covered with a cairn, and had a capacity of 20 gallons, the smoke being led along the mountain side. The smugglers had conducted a regular trade.

WEST CHILTON.

Everything quiet. Refreshing seasons in local showers have visited different localities in this part of the county. Crops are looking fairly well. Gardens are luxuriant.

Monroe Atchison has been seriously ill with a nervous breakdown and his condition seemed awful, but under the treatment of Dr. Lee, of Randolph, he is recovering.

The hand of death has fallen heavily on the Pleasant Grove community lately—four new-made graves there in just a few days. Among the deceased was Mrs. Albert Patterson—a beautiful life is gone, but she will live again. Her loved ones will know her identity is not lost. Also Mr. James Cobb, but he will come back again. The resurrection means a gradual lifting up to perfection of life; that great era may begin in the near future. The time is coming when there will be no more death. This is good news, all based on the ransom for all.

Some of our people visited the singing at Union Grove Sunday. They report a good singing, good dinner and large crowd, with Hayes, Holdritch, Conway, Blankenship, Northcutt and Jones as leaders.

On the second Sunday in July there will be a nail-day singing at Pelasant Grove in the Harp and Harmony books. All are invited. Several leaders are expected. We are not authorized to say there will be a public dinner served, but all visiting singers will be cared for. So bring your dinner and be sure to bring your books.

Little Viewer and the Providence writers are interesting, so come again.

Hurrah for Woman Suffrage!

A SAFE SUBSTITUTE FOR CALOMEL.

A Mild Vegetable Medicine for the Liver That Is Free From the Dangers of the Powerful Chemical, Calomel.

The Upchurch Drug store has a mild vegetable remedy that successfully takes the place of the powerful mineral drug calomel, the old-fashioned liver medicine. This remedy is Dodson's Liver-Tone, a very pleasant tasted liquid that gives quick but gentle relief from constipation without the bad after-effects which so often follow taking calomel.

Dodson's Liver-Tone is fully guaranteed to be a perfect substitute for calomel, and if you buy a bottle and it does not entirely satisfy you, The Upchurch Drug Store will promptly give you your money back upon request.

It is fine for both children and grown people.

VERBENA.

Mrs. Abbie Burkhalter is visiting friends and relatives in Chambers County.

Several of our people went to Bethel Sunday and enjoyed the day fine. It gave me great pleasure to see the old people singing the good old songs in the Sacred Harp and Christian Harmony.

O, that time would come when the old-time songs, the old-time prayer meetings, the old-time preachings, and the old-time religion would come back and be the practice of today. I do not wish to discard the new music at all, but I think we should use the new music in all-day singings and social gatherings, but lay it down when it comes to Church services.

Yours for old-time songs and old-time religion,

A FRIEND TO ALL.

Help For Those Who Have Stomach Trouble.

After doctoring for about twelve years for a bad stomach trouble, and spending nearly five hundred dollars for medicine and doctor's fees, I purchased my wife one box of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, which did her so much good that she continued to use them and they have done her more good than all of the medicine I bought before.—Samuel Boyer, Folsom, Iowa. This medicine is for sale by Alred Drug Co. Samples free.

Money-Making Made Easy.

During these strenuous times one is at a disadvantage if sick or bilious. An occasional dose of St. Joseph's Liver Regulator (either liquid or powders) will strengthen and brighten the entire person, thus keeping one in trim for the battles of life. Druggists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50c a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25c a box. Give it a trial and satisfy yourself of its splendid regulating qualities. Don't forget the name—"St. Joseph's." Take no other.

SINGING CONVENTION.

Summer colds are hard to get rid of, and frequently lead to asthma, bronchitis and hay fever. Don't let your cold get a hold on you, but use Foley's Honey and Tar Compound for quick relief. Mr. H. Allen, Chelsea, Wis., says: "We prefer Foley's Honey and Tar Compound to stop a cough, as it seems to stop it quicker than other cough medicines. It will ward off a cold if taken in time." WOODROW WILSON NOMINATED FOR PRESIDENT ON FORTY-SIXTH BALLOT

LONG DEADLOCK ENDS AFTER RECORD-BREAKING FIGHT

Convention Hall, Baltimore, Md.—Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey was nominated for the presidency here on the forty-sixth ballot. The fortyfifth ballot showed that he needed only 95 ballots to nominate him.

Underwood's name was withdrawn, and Alabama cast her vote for Wilson. The name of Foss was withdrawn and Massachusetts swung into line for Wilson. Clark's name was also withdrawn and New York moved that the nomination be made unanimous.

Chairman James directed the calling of the roll for the forty-third time.

The hall was quiet as Illinois was reached. When Roger C. Sullivan of Chicago announced: "Eighteen votes for Clark, 40 for Wilson," there was great cheering.

Forty-Third Ballot.

Chairman James pounded the table with his gavel and finally quietd the uproar. "Illinois, under the unit rule, casts 58 votes for Wilson," he announced and another cheer greeted the shift. This gave Wilson a clear gain of 58 votes in Illinois. The New Jersey governor continued to gain. In Iowa he added 1 1-2 to his total vote.

When Kentucky was called and the vote was announced 26 for Clark, one of the delegates demanded:

"I want to know if Kentucky can vote for Wilson if a majority of the delegates desire to do so?"

Governor McCreary, chairman of the delegation, argued that the instructions of the Kentuckians would not allow a break. The Wilson men did not press the point, although evidently confident of a vote in the delegation.

The New York delegation had decided in caucus to continue to cast its 90 votes for Clark. The vote in the caucus showed for Clark, 78; for Wilson, 10, and for Underwood, 2.

Wilson Gains.

When Virginia was reached, Senator Swanson arose to explain the state's vote. He asserted that at a caucus the delegation had decided to enforce the unit rule for the first time. Wilson had secured a majority of the delegation and the state's 21 votes were cast for him.

This gave Wilson a gain of 108 and Clark a loss of 101. Underwood lost five and a half. The announcement of this vote started a Wilson demonstration.

"Come on you Wilson!" shouted the Jersey delegation, and they leaped to their chairs.

The ballot left Wilson 124 votes short of the necessary two-thirds to nominate.

Forty-Fourth Vote.

Once more the call of the roll began. It was the forty-fourth ballot and Wilson in the beginning gained 1 in Arizona; Colorado climbed aboard "the band wagon," giving Wilson a gain of 9. This made the vote 10 to 2 for Wilson. One of the two was Mrs. Anna B. Pitzer, sister-in-law of Speaker Clark.

In Idaho on this ballot Wilson lost half a vote, but he gained 2 as Indiana's vote was cast solidly for him.

It was rumored on the convention floor that Governor Marshall of Indiana would be a candidate for vice president if Wilson were nominated.

The Mississippi delegation was in caucus when called on the forty-fourth ballot and was passed.

Maryland gave Wilson a gain of 1 1-2 and Ohio gave him a gain of 1 more.

The forty-fourth ballot put Wilson 96 1-2 votes away from a nominal. His vote was 629, a gain of 27 as compared with the forty-third ballot.

Clark dropped from 329 to 306.

The situation led to the belief that Wilson would be nominated on the forty-fifth ballot.

An effort was made at the end of the forty-fourth roll call by the Washington delegation to vote proxies on a poll of that delegation. Chairman James insisted upon maintaining his position, formerly taken, that no proxies should be voted in the convention.

Row in Washington.

An appeal was taken from convention, but the chair was sustained by a roaring vote, which seemed almost unanimous.

The polling of the Washington delegates showed that of the 28 delegates, with half a vote each, about cutting Washington's vote in the convention to 11 1-2. On the poll, eight of these were cast for Clark and 3 1-2 for Wilson, and Washington being under the unit rule, Senator Jones was empowered and cast the

The end came in sight when, at the beginning of the forty-sixth ballot, Senator Bankhead of Alabama, manager for the Underwood forces, mounted the platform.

"Mr. Chairman," he began, "Mr. Underwood entered this contest hoping he might secure the nomination from this convention. But I desire to say for him that his first and greatest hope was that, through this contest he might eliminate for all time every vestige of sectional prejudice in this convention. Mr. Underwood would willingly forego this nomination if the country has concluded that Mason and Dixon's line has been trampled out and that it is once more a thoroughly united country."

Bankhead Speaks.

Senator Bankhead said Mr. Underwood did not enter the race to defeat any man and would not be party to any suhc plan. His hope was that what he had accomplished for the Democracy would help to secure the election of a Democratic president next November. He was for the party nominee and always had been. Mr. Underwood had taken no personal part in the campaign and would have no regrets.

Senator Bankhead said Mr. Underwood would stay in the house and perform "his great duties without complaint."

"How about vice president?" called a delegate.

"Vice president No," shouted the senator. "Do not take him from his present post if you cannot elevate him to the highest office. Vice president? No. Anybody can sit in the vice president's chair. Even I, humble as I am, could sit there and say: 'The gentleman from New York moves that we now adjourn.' It would be a crime to take him from his present duties, and I hope no one will present his name to this convention."

Senator Bankhead's action in withdrawing Mr. Underwood aroused the ire of the Missouri delegation and toward the end of his remarks he was constantly interrupted.

How Governor Wilson Heard News.

Seagirt, N. J.—Governor Wilson was seated on the veranda of the "little white house" with Mrs. Wilson and his daughters when he received the news of his nomination from his managers.

"The honor is as great as can come to any man by the nomination of a party," he said, "especially in the circumstances. I hope I appreciate it at its true value; but just at this moment I feel the tremendous responsibility it involves even more than I feel the honor.

"I hope with all my heart that the party will never have reason to regret it."

Governor Wilson was posing for a photograph with his wife and daughters when he was informed that Underwood had withdrawn.

"Well, I declare," said the governor, "that will give me enough votes, if there are to be no more."

Mrs. Wilson, whose native state is Georgia, said:

"The only thing I regret is that [illegible]

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

The Document Covers Every Subject of Importance Which Has Been the Subject of Party Discussion During the Last Four Years.

The following is a summary of the planks of the Democratic platform:

Reaffirms party's devotion to the principles of Democratic government as formulated by Jefferson.

Declares for a tariff for revenue only and denounces "the high Republican tariff as the principal cause of the unequal distribution of wealth."

Favors immediate downward revision of present duties, especially upon necessaries of life. Favors gradual reduction so as not to interfere with or destroy legitimate industries.

Denounces President Taft for vetoing tariff bills of last congress. Condemns Republican party "for failure to redeem its promises of 1908 for downward revision." Takes issue with the Republican platform as to the high cost of living, contending it is largely due to the high tariff laws.

Favors vigorous enforcement of the original features of the anti-trust law. Demands such additional legislation as may be necessary to crush private monopoly.

Favors prohibition of holding companies, interlocking directors, watering, etc. Condemns Republican administration for "comrpomising with the Standard Oil company and Tobacco Trust." Denounces as "usurpation the efforts of Republicans to deprive the states of their rights and to enlarge powers of the Federal government. "There is," says the platform, "no twilight zone between the nation and the state in which exploiting interests can take refuge from both."

Urges people to support proposed constitutional amendments, pending in various state legislatures, providing for an income tax and election of United States senators by direct vote of the people. As justification of the campaign expenditures, attention is campaign expenditures, attention is directed "to the enormous expenditures of money in behalf of the president and his predecessor in the recent presidential contest."

Declares for presidential preferential primaries. Directs national committee to provide for selection at primaries of members of national committee.

Pledges party to enactment of law prohibiting campaign contributions by corporations and unreasonable campaign contributions by individuals.

Favors single presidential term and making president ineligible for reelection.

Denounces Republican administration on charge of extravagance and demands return to simplicity and economy befitting a Democratic government.

Favors efficient supervision and rate regulation of railroads, express companies, telegraph and telephone lines and a valuation of these companies by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and also regulation over insurance and stock of corporations. In connection with a demand for such revision of the banking laws as will give temporary relief in case of financial distress, there is a denunciation of the Aldrich bill prepared by the monetary commission.

The present method of depositing government funds is condemned and the party is pledged to the enactment of a law for the deposit of such funds by competitive bidding in state or national banks, without discrimination as to locality.

Recommends investigation of agricultural credit societies in Europe to ascertain whether a system of rural credits may be devised suitable to conditions in the United States.

Pledges party to enactment of legislation to prevent devastation of lower Mississippi valley by floods and the control of the Mississippi is declared to be a national rather than a state problem. The maintenance of navigable channel is also recommended.

Favors national aid regarding post roads.

Repeats party's declaration of the platform of 1908 as to rights of labor and pledges the party to an employes' compensation law. Declares the unnecessary withdrawal of public land tends to retard development and bring reprosch upon policy of conservation; that reservations should be limited to purposes which they purport to serve; favors broadest liberality in administering land laws and says forest reserve act permitting homestead entries within the national forests had not been nullified by administrative regulation; declares for immediate action to make available Alaskan coal lands and safeguarding of lives of miners.

Believes in fostering growth of a merchant marine and urges speedy enactment of laws for the greater security of life and property at sea. Reaffirms previous declarations regarding pure food and public health.

Recommends law reform legislation.

Montgomery. — Professional [illegible] balked at paying a $5 license tax [illegible] posed by the revenue bill passed [illegible] the last legislature. It didn't do [illegible] good, for the court of appeals [illegible] ruled that the tax must be paid. [illegible] yers, physicians, dentists and on down the line, will be called upon to [illegible] this obligation, according to [illegible] opinion of the court handed down. The above case came up first [illegible] the city court of Montgomery, where it was tested by C. L. McLendon, [illegible] attorney. McLendon declined to pay the tax. He lost in the lower court and the appellate court affirmed the decision of the trial court. The state of Alabama was made the defendant.

Ashville.—The commissioners court of St. Clair county passed an order setting aside August 14, 15 and 16 as road working days. Every citizen in the county, whether of age or not, is earnestly requested to give all or a part of their time during these days. The object of the order is to get the citizens in each beat interested in the good roads for their precinct and later on to get them so interetsed that they will form clubs in each beat and will be working the roads more often than just at this time and the different localities will be striving to have the best roads of any of the other precincts.

Talladega.—Through the efforts of the Talladega chamber of commerce a cotton compress has been secured for Talladega. The compress is expected to increase the cotton receipts of Talladega 30,000 bales. With the excellent railroad facilities it is expected that Talladega will rank second to no town in the state as a cotton market. The compress is expected to be finished in time to handle the season's crop.

Marion.—Reports from different portions of Perry county show that grass worm is doing much damage to corn. In some instances whole fields of corn have been destroyed and the land planted a second time. In Cunningham beat cotton squares are falling to the ground which is said to be caused by too much cool weather.

Florence.—The first cotton blossom of the season was brought to Florence by Andrew Darby of Wood land, route No. 2. This progressive farmer had the honor of producing the first flower last year and this year previous, and his record for 1911 is up to the standard.

Talladega.—A bond issue for building purposes will be voted on by the people of Talladega on July 8. It is proposed to issue $25,000 of 20 year 5 per cent bonds for the purpose of paving the public square. Battle street, East street, Court street and North street.

Girard.—Good rains have been falling for the past two days and fall and truck crops are much improved as a result. The acreage of this section seems to be a little off on account of late planting, but the farms have never been better worked.

Decatur.—The contract for building the new $50,000 Lyons hotel was awarded and work on the construction will be commenced at once, and is to be completed by January 1913.

Talladega.—The fifth meeting of the Coosa River Baptist association was held at Tallasahatchie church.

Birmingham.—The semi-annual examinations for foremen and assistant bosses certificates will be held by the State Board of Mine Examiners from July 22 to July 26. The Board consists of Charles H. Nesbitt, State Mine Inspector, Chairman Ershel Ramsay, J. H. Fillmore, W. D. Hayhouse, Carr McCormick and T. H. Tinney. It is expected there will be upwards of one hundred men attend the certificates and the examinations will be interesting. The examinations will be held in the Chamber of Commerce.

Gadsden.—A contract was let for the erection of the new Odd Fellows hall, to be erected in this city on Walnut street.

Montgomery.—The board of trustees of the Cherokee county high school, located at Center, has sent to the department of education the name of J. A. Johnson, who has been recommended for principal of that institution.

Eufaula.—News reached Eufaula that a farmer named Parker, who lives about twelve miles from Eufaula was killed by lightning during the heavy storm which passed across the county.

Huntsville.—The Woodmen of the World celebrated the Fourth of July with appropriate exercises. About 3,000 Woodmen were in attendance from all parts of northern Alabama.

Huntsville.—The women managers of the hospital have made a joint report to the city commissioners and probate judge, in which they show that the maintenance fund of the hospital must be increased $1,000 a year if the institution is to be operated [illegible]

A WARNING TO BOYS

Young Johnny Winters, strong and well,
Went out to celebrate the day,
A cannon cracker in his hand,
His heart attuned to fun and play!

He set the cracker up on end
And lit the fuse, as you have done;
Then as it sputtered, sparked and spat,

Excitedly he turned about
And waited, with his chums, the noise!
"It's fizzled!" then said careless John,
"I'll take a look," he told the boys.

Above the powder stick he bent—
The air was filled with ripping sound!
The boys rushed up with awestruck eyes
To Johnny, lying on the ground!

He lay upon the cheerless sod,
His face all marred with bloody chars—
And all through life the boy must wear
The cannon cracker's awful scars!

Mike, whining boys, from Johnny's fate

Rules Jefferson Lived By

The hundred and sixty-eighth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson was celebrated with a big banquet in Indianapolis April 13. In this connection Jefferson's ten rules of life, which follow, will be of interest:

1. Never put off till tomorrow what you can do today.
2. Never trouble another for what you can do yourself.
3. Never spend money before you have it.
4. Never buy what you do not want because it is cheap; it will be dear to you.
5. Pride costs us more than hunger, thirst and cold.
6. We never repent of having eaten too little.
7. Nothing is troublesome that we do willingly.
8. How much pain have cost us the evils which have never happened.
9. Take things away by their smooth handle.
10. When angry, count ten becore you speak; if very angry, a hundred.

Here are some of the great principles of government advocated by Mr. Jefferson in his first inaugural address, March 4, 1801:

The support of the state governments in all their rights as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against anti-republican tendencies.

The preservation of the general government in its whole constitutional vigor, as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad.

Absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority, the vital principles of republics, from which there is no appeal but to force the vital principle and immediate parent of despotism.

The supremacy of the civil over the military authority—economy in the public expense, that labor may be lightly burdened.

The honest payment of our debts and sacred preservation of the public faith.

Trial by juries impartially elected.

"These principles form the bright constellation which has gone before us, and guided our steps through an age of revolution and reformation. The wisdom of our sages and blood of our heroes have been devoted to their attainment; they should be the creed of our political faith; the text of civic instruction; the touchstone by which to try the service of those we trust; and should we wander from them in moments of error or of alarm, let us hasten to retrace our steps and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty and safety."

Grave of the Author of the Declaration of Independence.

"The Fourth."

"A century and more has passed, and as the foundations of this government are more firmly settled, as the structure reared by the fathers now spans the continent from ocean to ocean; and has victoriously established its right to be, political liberty has ceased to be the mere dream of the enthusiast, and has become the everyday fact of the most of thought and action in the world. This was the first step; and we are here to-day to [illegible]

In consequence of the unexpected change in the editorial management of The Union and Banner, and the Fourth being generally observed as a holiday some communications have unfortunately to be omitted from this issue.

September 30th to October 5th are the dates selected for the Central Alabama Fair at Selma and it is expected that the exhibits in all departments will be much larger than last year's as a number of classes have been added to the premium list, making it now one of the most complete in the State. Negotions are under way for some novel and entertainment attractions and the management promises the best Fair ever held in this section.

Neatly Evaded Apology.

One day, Beckmann, the comic actor, was induced to take off a well-known newspaper editor, Frankel by name, in one of the characters he was representing in Berlin. He performed his task so cleverly that at the close the audience broke out into loud calls for Frankel. The journalist brought an action, and Beckmann was condemned to go to the house of the insulted party and there beg his pardon in the presence of witnesses. At the hour appointed Frankel sat in the circle of his family, together with a number of relatives and friends whom he had convened for the occasion, waiting the arrival of the delinquent. He tarried long, and half an hour had passed in weary suspense, when, at last, the door opeend, and Beckmann put his head in and asked: "Does Mr Meir live here?" "Oh, no," answered Frankel, "he lives next door." "Ah, then I beg your pardon," said the actor, and hastily withdrew, having thus acquitted himself of the imposed penance to the great annoyance of Frankel, and the intense amusement of the assembled witnesses.

Borrowing Books.

The practice of borrowing books is essentially an evil one in those who can afford to own books, and public libraries serve to encourage and foster the evil, though they are of very great value to the poor student. We think that, upon general principles people should own the books they read. We believe heartily in buying books, reading books and keeping books. As a reference a public library serves an admirable purpose, and in many instances it is of undoubted advantage to the people. But one that would be surely profited by books should own them if he can, and should have them for companions continually around him.—Eugene Field.

BOUND TO EXERT INFLUENCE

It is by the passion of sympathy that we enter into the concerns of others; that we are moved as they are moved, and are never suffered to be indifferent spectators of almost anything which men can do or suffer. For sympathy must be considered as a sort of substitution, by which we are put into the place of another man, and affected in a good measure as he is affected; so that this passion may either partake of the nature of those which regard self-preservation, and turning upon pain may be a source of the sublime; or it may turn upon ideas of pleasure, and then whatever has been said of the social affections, whether they regard society in general, or only some particular modes of it, may be applicable here.

It is by this principle chiefly that poetry, painting and other affecting arts transfuse their passion from one breast to another, and are often capable of grafting a delight on wretchedness, misery and death itself. It is a common observation that objects in the reality which would shock, are, in tragical and such like representations, the source of a very high species of pleasure. This, taken as a fact, has been the cause of much reasoning. This satisfaction has been commonly attributed, first, to the comfort we receive in considering that so melancholy a story is no more than a fiction; and next, the contemplation of our own freedom from evils we see represented. I am afraid it is a practice much too common, in inquiries of this nature, to attribute the cause of feelings which merely arise from the mechanical structures of our bodies, or from the natural from or constitution of our minds, to certain conclusions of the reasoning faculty on the objects presented to us; for I have some reason to apprehend that the influence of reason in producing our passions is nothing near so extensive as is commonly believed.—Edmund Burke.

PRESSURE IN OCEAN DEPTHS

Enormous Force That It Would Seem Nothing Could Be Able to Resist.

An implosion, as the term indicates, is the direct opposite of an explosion. The conditions most favorable for the production of an implosion exist at great depth in the sea. At 2,500 fathoms the pressure is, roughly speaking, about two and a half tons to the square inch, a pressure that is several time greater than that exerted by steam upon the piston of a powerful engine.

An interesting illustration of the enormous force of this deep-sea pressure was afforded on one occasion when a government vessel was engaged in marine exploration. A thick glass tube several inches in length and full of air was hermetically sealed at both ends, wrapped in flannel and placed in one of the wide copper cylinders employed to protect deep-sea thermometers when they are sent down with the sounding apparatus. Holes were bored in this cylinder so that water might have free access to the interior round the glass. The case was then lowered to a depth of 2,000 fathoms and drawn up again.

The cylinder was bulged and bent inward, just as if it had been crumpled inward by a violent squeeze. The glass tube itself, within the flannel wrapper, was reduced to a fine powder. The tube, it would seem as it slowly descended into the depths, held out long against the pressure, but at last suddenly gave way, and so was crushed by the violence of the action to a fine powder.

Azores.

Trade conditions in the Azores are peculiar. The islands are small, and at best only a limited business can be done. As to lumber or timber, all of which is from the United States, the islands are supplied principally from cargoes of wrecked and damaged vessels. At least for the past four years this has prevailed, and during the first two weeks of January more than 150,000 feet of timber were discharged from a large steamer that encountered hurricane weather on its way from Mississippi to Europe and put into St. Michaels dismasted and with part of the deck load gone. To effect temporary repairs and permit the vessel to proceed the deck load was discharged and was sold at the low price of 2 cents per foot.—Consul Edward A. Creevey, St. Michaels.

Mount Pelee Eruption.

It will never be known how many human lives were lost in the Pelee eruption. It is generally understood that between 40,000 and 60,000 people perished. Mount Pelee was a volcano of some 5,000 feet, great masses of which were thrown suddenly upon the surrounding people in a semi-fluid condition. Escape was impossible, and so great was the force of the eruption that ships lying in the contiguous waters were almost swamped by the concussion of the air waves. Of the total number lost only 3,000 or 4,000 were white people.

SALUTED COLORS HE LOVED

Patriotic Action of Old Man Made Deep Impression on Soldiers From the Front.

There is so much that is painful and distressing about war that every soldier who has served at the front must bring back with him many memories that he would gladly forget. But there are gracious and touching incidents as well, one of which a Companion subscriber who fought through the Civil war thus recalls:

"Just after the second Battle of Bull Run and that of Chantilly, while the Union army lay near Alexandria and Fairfax Court House, a certain Massachusetts battery was ordered back to Washington to help garrison the capital.

"On the outskirts of Alexandria the column was halted, with its head opposite a little story-and-a-half cottage surrounded by an unpainted picket fence. As the halt was ordered, the door of the cottage opened, and old, white-haired man came down the steps toward the road with his hand raised toward the flag was was carried as the guidon of the battery.

"The color-bearer released the staff from its socket and lowered it to the ground, and the old man, who had by this time come up to the line, drew the flag toward him, reverently raised it to his lips, turned, and without a word walked back into house.

The incident made a deep impression on the men who saw it. It meant more to those soldiers, who were bearing the brunt of a hard campaign, than a score of eloquent addresses on patriotism and the love of country. Who the old man was we never knew." —Youth's Companion.

PERCENTAGE TO THE GOOD

Statement, However, Not Altogether Reassuring to the Owner of a Heavy Car.

The lightning was flashing and the thunder was crashing, and along with them were rain, hail, and a wind that threatened fairly to blow off the top of the universe. Hackley urged the car forward at a terrific pace, seeking shelter, and at last, as he rounded a turn in the road the welcome sign, Garage, was to be seen a hundred yards ahead. He stopped in front of it, and the long, lank countryman in charge swung open the doors.

"Gee!" said Hackley, dubiously, as he looked inside and took in the sad fact that this, like many other so-called garages, was nothing by an old-time barn, transformed into its present glory by a coat of paint and a swinging sign. "How about that floor of yours, mister?"

"No doubt," said Hackley, "but is it safe?"

"I reckon it is," said the proprietor, glancing proudly within. "I've hed thutteen ottermobiles in here a'reddy this season, and no more'n six on 'em's fell threw."—Harper's Weekly.

Silver Fizzed Tongue.

It was a matter of comment at a recent banquet in Savannah, says the Chicago Post, that the Chatham artillery punch was missing. There was some alarm over this until it was established that the recipe had not really gone the way of the secrets concerning Tyrian purple and Damascus steel.

Artillery punch is a solid punch. Its veiled wallop is like that of a boxing glove with a brick in it.

Col. A. C. Dawes, who was presiding at a dinner following the installation of a lodge of Elks, had a bowl of it brewed without consulting the company. He had told two or three prominent novitiates that he was going to call upon them after dinner, and they had implored him to pass them by; their timidity was extreme and their command of language schoolboyish. Would the colonel please ignore them? He would.

The dinner progressed and the punch came on at its conclusion. After two rounds had passed one of the after-dinner amateurs slipped around to the toastmaster's chair and whispered in his ear:

"Dawes, why don't you ask me to speak?"

The First Cable.

The laying down of the first intercontinental cable was begun in 1857. The vessels, two American and two British, laid 300 miles of the cable, when it snapped, and the attempt was put off until 1858. In August of that year the junction between the two continents was completed by the laying down of 2,050 miles of cable from Valentia, Ireland, to Newfoundland. The engineer was Sir Charles Bright, who was knighted for his success. The first two messages were sent on August 5, and were from the queen of England to the president of the United States and his reply. But after sending 271 messages the cable proved a failure, and a perfect one was not secured until 1866.

Both Professionals.

Miss Mildred Davenant, the settlement worker and essayist, said of the summer girl at a dinner in Chicago:

"The summer girl does no harm. The summer man, you see, understands her."

Miss Davenant, twirling the stem of her champagne glass, then added demurely:

"Flirting, like boxing, is only dangerous when one party to it is unskilled.

READY TO FOLLOW LEADER

Unless It Is Fear, There Is No Contagion So Quickly Spread as That of Emotion.

George F. Bass used to tell a story that illustrated the contagion of emotions.

Towser shook off slumber for a moment, lifted his head and evinced his sympathy by a steadfast look, then settled down to dreams again. Another silence. Then the master inspired to fuller expression of his woes by the response of his auditor, continued:

"Houn', dis y' 'arth am a place o' trouble an' a vale o' tears; de debbil he roams, up an' down like a hongry lion seekin' who he may devour; de ways of de weeked am shorely full o' tribbalation."

This time Towser's nose was lifted toward the ceiling and a long, lugubrious woo-o-ow-woo-woo! expressed his acquiescence to his master's sentiments.

"Yes," was Mr. Bass's conclusion, "emotions are contagious; all that is needed is a proper leader."

Unwelcome Caller.

Two cows were being driven along Causewayend, Aberdeen, Scotland, one recent forenoon, when they ran into a house on Charles street. Before the animals could be ejected, they smashed a quantity of furniture, and one of them put a foot through the floor. The mistress of the house, who was in at the time, suffered a severe shock from the unexpected intrusion on the domestic circle.

Money in Growing Willows.

A Chicago merchant advertised for 1,000,000 willow clothes baskets which indicates that the willow-growing industry is very much neglected. The government is encouraging it by teaching farmers how to grow willows. They require a soil that will grow wheat.

During the summer months mothers of young children should watch for any unnatural looseness of the bowels. When given prompt attention at this time serious trouble may be avoided. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy can always be depended upon. For sale by Alred Drug Co.

DODSON'S LIVER-TONE INSTEAD OF CALOMEL.

As a remedy for a torpid liver calomel has more than met its match in Dodson's Liver-Tone. It does not lash the liver on to perform its work at the cost of its strength.

Calomel depends for its power upon exciting the liver to do more work, and often the liver is too weak to stand such treatment, and you are worse off than before.

Dodson's Liver-Tone cannot cause any of the dangerous effects that often follow the use of calomel. It is entirely vegetable and pleasant to the taste, and is suitable for children and grown people.

of superior quality. We have just received a car of mixed food which was bought last winter that we will sell at prices lower than you will find elsewhere. We also have plenty of seed and sorghum peas. Don't forget that we bought our flour before the advance and are giving our customers the benefit of the low price.

We have just secured a bargain in the way of some fine summer suits that will be sold remarkably cheap. Come in and see them. You will find a full stock of fine buggies and wagons here that can be bought either for cash or on time. If you want a wagon be sure to see me before you buy.

A solid car of 16 per cent phosphate bought at $12.50 will be sold at cost to those who come first. We always have plenty of guano. We have the best mowing machine on the market.

Commencing June 1st I will give rebate tickets on all cash sales. Call in and ask about them.

This is to notify you to appear before the Probate Court of this county at the next term thereof, commencing Monday, the 27th day of May, 1912, then and there to show cause, if any you have, why a decree for the sale of said real estate should not be made for the payment of the taxes assessed upon the same, fees and costs.

This 29th day of April, 1912,

E. B. DEASON,
Judge of Probate.

MERCY THAT STINGS

NIGHT COURT JUDGE METES OUT DISGUISED INJUSTICE.

Fashionable Women Enjoy His Cruelly Impertinent Questioning of Forlorn Girl and Then Praise Him for His Kindness.

She wasn't a bad looking girl at all. Not many months ago she had been a very good looking girl indeed. In spite of the slush underfoot and the drizzling rain that had been falling, she was not noticeably bedraggled when she came into the night court for women. One chiefly noticed that her eyes were dull and her bearing careless. She had become used to the routine of her life—and that routine included the court. Emotion had been burned out of her by the caustic of existence. A flare of drunken anger—a maudlin sob—were her limits of expression. She mounted the bridge drearily, hopelessly. It was evident enough the girl didn't care.

"Ask her—"

A buzz of whispering filled the court room. One looked up to see a bevy of handsomely dressed women sitting by the side of the judge. They wore evening gowns. Gems sparkled against the pallor of their breasts. Their fair shoulders were protected against the draughts of the filthy courtroom by costly furs. They rested white kid elbows upon the judge's desk and propped their arrogant and complacent faces in slender hands and stared that dingy courtroom down. The judge had obviously been dining with them. His handsome face was flushed and he often laughed behind his hand with the prettiest of his callers. At their prompting he asked that poor, bedevilled, hopeless woman who stood before him questions that were still cruelly impertinent, though he was a judge and she a woman of the streets. The silk clad women by his side tittered and exchanged mocking glances. The woman's voice grew hoarse and strained as she replied. She stared at the women of another world as those women of the poor streets in Paris may have stared at the women of the court some hundred odd years ago.

"You may go now," said the judge, silkily. The women who sat by his side upon a bench that had been defiled, stretched out their pretty hands and patted him gently upon the arm.

"How good you are to these people," said one to him, addressing him by his first name.

The old court officer was leading the woman toward the door. A bright spot burned high upon her cheekbones. The flames of rage flared in her widely opened, staring eyes. "G'wan now, kid," said the old court officer, patting her shoulder with awkward kindness. "Don't you care."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

BUSIEST STREET IN WORLD

London Thoroughfare That Does a Business of $675,000,000 in One Day.

"Yes; we are proud of this, our street," remarked a stock broker who was strolling through Throgmorton street. "We call it 'The Street'—just as if it were London's only thoroughfare. One of the shortest, it is certainly the richest in the world. What other street has transacted business aggregating $675,000,000 in one day?

"Amusing comedies, and even farces, are here played daily. The inexhaustible spectacle of Finance, with its romance, plucky exploits, brigandisms, daring adventures, and tragical collapses, is far more attractive than most artificial dramatic inventions. Nowhere else is the play of human emotions so varied; here are experienced a rapid succession of hopes and fears, sickening failures and intoxicating successes.

"Here, when markets are 'booming,' is a scene of palpitating, nervous excitement unknown elsewhere, except when a wild panic is engineered by frenzied financiers in America. But, compared with London, New York is a mere local market; we deal in the securities of the universe. Money rules the world; we control the total gold supply. In the street values are constantly being manipulated; fortunes are promptly made—and lost. Between the 'bulls,' who want to force prices up, and the 'bears,' who strive to bang them down, a fierce battle rages incessantly."

TRAMP GOT BACK AT HIM

"You ought to ask for manners rather than money."

"Well, I thought I'd strike you for the money and somebody else for the manners."

GEORGE ADE ON HATS.

"People say there is no reason, no logic in Easter millinery. What a falsehood!"

The speaker was George Ade. He continued:

"Hats, whether Easter or otherwise, are full of logic, full of reason. A little boy said to his father one day:

"'What's a wide-awake hat, pa?'

"The father logically and reasonably replied:

"'A wide-awake hat, my son, is, of course, one without a nap.'"

ALL THE BREAKFAST FOODS.

"What kind of breakfast food have you?" the dyspeptic inquired of the waitress at Cherryvale inn who stood before him with her arms akimbo.

"We got all the reg'lar kinds," said the waitress, who was a Cherryville girl. "Ham an' eggs, fried steak, brook trout, doughnuts an' apple pie. You can have 'em all, if you like, an' a cup o' coffee an' griddle cakes

Marse Henry was evidently completely consumed by his own wrath. At any rate we haven't heard from him since his little wrangle with Gov. Wilson a while back.

New potatoes at $3.60 a bushel are driving the people back to either a meat diet or starvation.—Age-Herald. With the beef trust liberated and roaming at large, it certainly appears that it will be starvation.

Even the county chairmen and the college widows in Indiana could not induce George Ade to run for Governor.—Birmingham Age-Herald. George evidently prefers politics in the book, where he can make the other fellow say whatever is wanted.

Up to the hour of going to press Nick Longworth of Ohio is sawing wood and saying nothing.—Age-Herald. After one or two little one-round affairs with the Colonel, caused by Nick's propensity for talking, he has evidently decided that it's safer to stay quiet.

Whether Taft gets it or whether Teddy gets it, what difference does it make. The Democrats are due to get the licking of their lives either way.

A short while ago the prospects for democratic victory this Fall were considered fairly good—at any rate, better than they had been for some time. However, this hopefulness was about as well founded as that of a get rich quick victim before he finds out he's stung. It came from a lot of rather vague and roseate theories and plans they were possessed of, the fallaciousness and impossibility of which is being shown up by the cold gray dawn of facts and reason now that people have commenced to think.

Tennessee has a Republican Senator for the first time in twenty or thirty or even possibly forty years. It also has for the first time perhaps in its history, a Republican governor and United States Senator at the same time. Newell Sanders received the appointment as U. S. Senator to fill the vacancy caused by Senator Taylor's death and he is considered to have a strong chance of election for a full term when the legislature meets.

There may be some impression out to the effect that the school tax to be voted on soon is an additional or new tax. This is an error. The election is merely for the purpose of retaining the old tax that was levied six years ago. This tax was only voted for six years at the time and as the time has now expired it is necessary to authorize the collection of it for another six years. This tax is vitally necessary for the welfare of the schools of Chilton and we trust that every man with the interests of the children of the county at heart will vote for it. It is the metal with which the mold will be made from which our future citizens will be cast. Let us be true to them and vote for it. Remember it is not one cent additional out of your pocket more than you are now paying. It is merely your approval of it and authorization to continue it.

America has always been the leader in any effort to relieve distress; especially has this been true in cases where catastrophes have occurred in some foreign land. However this time it is nearer home. Down in the Mississippi valley there are untold thousands who are deprived of their all by the devastating sweep of the Mississippi out over fertile lands and comfortable homes. People who are without sufficient clothing, who know not where their next meal is coming from, and who are without any possible means of livelihood for months to come. The government is doing everything that is possible for their relief, but the magnitude of the task demands that help come from everywhere and at once. Help of any description, no matter what you contribute it will be appreciated. There is an appeal in this week's paper for seed for the uses of the farmers who have lost all chance to make any, but certain crops. If it is possible for you to contribute any, do so.

Last week's Press attempts to make it appear that this term of Court was absolutely unnecessary and an injustice to the farmer. It says that the democrats made an effort to have the court postponed in order that the farmer might have a chance to catch up, but hat this was opposed by certain people who did not have his welfare at heart. Ah Ho. Why not say that a petition was submitted to Judge Pearson agreeing to a postponement provided court was called in July after the farmers would be through with the rush of their work. But that this was refused and a complete annulment of this session of court demanded. When this occurred the majority of the members of the bar and all of the court officers demanded that the session be called at the regular time. They were perfectly willing for a postponement to some more convenient time, but this was not as the Press would have you believe, what the democrats wanted They wanted no court at all until fall. The Press justifies this by saying that it would save the county $2,000. Very true, but following out that assumption we had just as well hold it every two years and save the county $6,000 There is just about as much reason in the proposition. Of course the fact that court proceedings are slow beyond endurance now, and that the people would only suffer additional discomforts, injustice and loss, would be of small moment. The Press doesn't take such minor things as that into its consideration in solving the weighty problems of state.

THE SCHOOL TAX SHOULD BE RETAINED.

Clanton, Ala. May 18, 1912.
To the Voters, Citizens and Tax Payers of Chilton County:

To one and all I wish to call your especial attention to a matter of vast importance that will soon claim the attention of every good citizen of this county, and every voter who desires to see real progress and an onward and upward move to better conditions for all the people, more especially the coming generations of children, who are soon to be the men and women of this country, on whose heads and shoulders will rest the destiny of our common country, for weal or woe, a question and a duty confronts each and all of us, namely, that on June next there is an election called for the purpose of granting the county board of commissioners the privilege of again levying a tax of 10 cents on each one hundred dollars worth of taxable property in this county, for the purpose of the better maintenance of our public schools in this county.

Now this amount of tax has been levied and collected for the last six years, and has proven a great help in support of our public schools, and we can not afford to take a backward step, just now in the matter of better schools.

And we believe when our people take a proper view of this matter that they will register their approval, in calling on the commissioners, to again place this same tax for schools that we have had for six years past, but is now barred, unless the voters grant them an extention under the law that provides for the same.

If it were not for the remarks we have lately heard that it is believed that the people will vote it down that we attempt this agitation in favor of the continuance of the school tax. We hope that no kind of politics or partisanship will be the means of causing the voters of this county to take this educational bread out of the children's mouths. So let us for once, divest our minds of all prejudice and turn out on that day, and say by our votes that we are in favor of educating the children of Chilton, for it would prove to be one of the greatest calamities that has ever befallen our people.

Let me here repeat the language of (I believe) Rodger Sharman, when he exclaimed that, "we must educate! we must educate! or our boat must sink in the vortex, and our ship of state go down."

Now let me call the attention of the average tax payer to the fact the corporations and franchises, will pay at least two-thirds of said tax, and furthermore that the state, is already returning to this county, for schools and old soldiers more money than is paid into the state treasury from this county, and now in the face of these facts, are we going to neglect our plain duty and allow a matter of so great importance to pass us by, and in after years, live to see and regret our folly, and realize that we by indifference, neglect or carelessness, see that we were the chief factors in robbing our children and our neighbors' children of their chief birthright.

Oh, no, let us arouse ourselves and act the part of intelligent men and patriotic citizens, and say by our votes that we care more for the future welfare of our children than we do for a dime.

L. B. POUNDS.

SPECIAL COUNTY SCHOOL TAX ELECTION.

From what I can gather relative to this election, it appears that many voters in the county do not know that such election has been called, and for the benefit of those who have not noticed this call, I will say that this election will be held on the 3rd day of June, 1912, this year.

I consider this a very important election as it means so much for, or against the schools of our county. This election does not mean to add an extra one mill tax, but just to continue the one mill tax that we have had for the last six years. This tax amounts to about $4,000.00 each year, which is about one-fifth of the entire school funds for the county, and means, if voted out, that this $4,000.00 must come out of the pockets of the school patrons direct as a supplement, or your school term will be reduced about one and a half months. We cannot afford to take a backward step like this and deprive our children of this opportunity. The railroad companies and the corporations of our county will pay more than half of this tax if voted in again, and we never hear them kicking about it. I cannot see how any man can afford to vote against the education of his child. And those who vote against the levy of this school tax will certainly do so, as I see it. I trust that every voter will go to the polls June the 3rd, and vote for the Special County School Tax.

A keen student of human nature must have written the following: "When you see a young man sailing down a street shortly after midnight with his collar crumpled, you can make up your mind that there's a young girl crawling upstairs not far distant, with her shoes under her arm and an extinguished lamp in her hand."

THIS STORE WON'T GUARANTEE CALOMEL.

But We Have a Liver Medicine That We Do Guarantee With Money Back Offer.

The next time you think you need a dose of calomel, don't take it. Even if you have taken it often before, this might be the very dose that would salivate you. Its use is sometimes followed by dangerous after-effects. If you are constipated or bilious or if your liver has gotten lazy and inactive two or three doses of Dodson's Liver Tone, a pleasant tasted vegetable liquid, will "make you feel like new."

We would not recommend Dodson's Liver Tone in place of calomel if we were not willing to fully guarantee it. So anybody who buys a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone at the Upchurch Drug Co.'s and does not find it a perfect substitution for calomel may come into the store any day and get his or her money back.

It has absolutely no bad after- effects and is harmless for children as well as grown ups.

Bull Objected to Rider.

A millionaire rancher, of Pomona, Cal., was painfully injured, recently, while attempting to ride a large red Durham bull. He had made a wager with another rancher that he could remain on the bull's back for two minutes, faith in his ability to win the wager being based upon his experiences in broncho riding. He lost the bet by just 117 seconds, for three seconds after he mounted the animal's back, he was seated in the center of the corral nursing a badly wrenched hip and shoulder.

WOMAN SICK TWELVE YEARS

Wants Other Women to Know How She Was Finally Restored to Health.

Louisiana, Mo.:—"I think a woman naturally dislikes to make her troubles known to the public, but complete restoration to health means so much to me that I cannot keep from telling mine for the sake of other suffering women.

"I had been sick about twelve years, and had eleven doctors. I had dragging down pains, pains at monthly periods, bilious spells, and was getting worse all the time. I would hardly get over one spell when I would be sick again. No tongue can tell what I suffered from cramps, and at times I could hardly walk. The doctors said I might die at one of those times, but I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got better right away. Your valuable medicine is worth more than mountains of gold to suffering women."—Mrs. BERTHA MUFF, 503 N. 4th Street, Louisiana, Mo.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy, the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail.

"We don't want to get there too early," explained the judge, as they quitted the cabin. "We want to miss the work, but be on hand for the celebration."

"I suppose we may confidently look to you to favor us with a few eloquent words?" said Mr. Mahaffy.

"Please, judge—" it was Hannibal.

"Yes, dear lad?"

"I'm mighty sorry that ten dollars I loaned you was bad—but you don't need ever to pay it back! It were Captain Murrell gave it to me."

"I consecrate myself to his destruction! Judge Slocum Price cannot be humiliated with impunity!"

"I should think you would save your wind, Price, until you'd waddled out of danger!" Mahaffy spoke gruffly.

"How are you going to get me out of this, Solomon—for I suppose you are here to break jail for me," said the judge.

"Well, Price, I guess all we can do is to go back to town and see if I can get into my cabin—I've got an old saw there. If I can find it, I can come again tomorrow night and cut away one of the logs, or the cleats of the door."

"In heaven's name, do that tonight, Solomon!" implored the judge. "Why procrastinate?"

"Price, there's a pack of dogs in this neighborhood, and we must have a full night to move in, or they'll pull us down before we've gone ten miles!"

"You're right, Solomon; I'd forgotten the dogs."

Mahaffy closed and fastened the shutters, then he and Hannibal stole across the clearing and entered the

HAMPTON SCHOOL HOUSE.

Editor Union-Banner:

Some of the young people from Autauga went to Bethel Sunday and reported a nice time. The Sunday School Convention at New Salon was enjoyed by the Autauga people.

The Misses Dessie McDonald, Essie Bomster and Easley Watt were the guests of Miss Alice McDonald Sunday afternoon.

Mr. B. F. Boockholdt has returned from Newton where he has been going to school for the past four months.

There will be a Children's Day at White Pond the first Sunday in July. Everybody come and enjoy the day.

Best wishes to the Union and Banner,

NOBODY'S DARLING.

If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing housework all day, and crawling into bed dead tired at night. You must get out into the open air and sunlight. If you do this every day and keep your stomach and bowels in good order by taking Chamberlain's Tablets when needed, you should become both healthy and beautiful. For sale by Alred Drug Company.

oquence Not Always Persuasion.

"Eloquence," said Uncle Eben. "is liable to deceive de man dat has it. He 'casionally 'magines folks is agreein' wif 'im when dey's only keepin' quiet for fear of spoilin' a purty talk."

In these days of high cost of living, a med cine that ge s a man up out of bed and able to work in a few days is a valuable and welcome remedy. John Heath, Michigan Bar, Cal., had kidney and bladder trouble, was confined to his bed, unable to turn without help. "I commended using Foley Kidney Pills and can truly say I was relieved at once." His exa ple is worth following. Upchurch Drug Company.

Not Really So Bad.

"And I suppose," said Miss Gushington, "that while in London you were at court?" "Only once," admitted Mr. Lushington, blushing. "But I wasn't guilty and I got off with a reprimand."—Newport News.

N. J. Gotham, Cashier Bank of Woodville, Ga. had a very severe attack of kidney trouble and the pains in his kidneys and back were terrible. "I got a bottle of Foley Kidney Pills from our druggist and they entirely relieved me. I have more benefit from them than any other medicine." Upchurch Drug Company.

First Coal Oil Well.

Coal oil was first used as a liniment for medicinal purposes. Colonel Edwin L. Drake in 1859 drilled the first well for oil near Titusville, Pa. It was the beginning of the great American oil industry.

Stimulate Children?

Ask your doctor how often he prescribes an alcoholic stimulant for children. He will probably say, "Very, very rarely." Ask him how often he prescribes a tonic for them. He will probably answer, "Very, very frequently." Then ask him about Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a strong and safe tonic for the young. Not a drop of alcohol in it.

Always keep a box of Ayer's Pills in the house. Just one pill at bedtime, now and then, will ward off many an attack of biliousness, indigestion, sick-headache. How many years has your doctor known these pills? Ask him all about them.

Made by the J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

Deadly Glasses.

A contrast to the Venetian glasses which were popularly supposed to fly to pieces if poisoned liquor were poured into them, were glasses which poisoned all who drank from them. The poison was crystallized at the bottom of the glass, from which it was indistinguishable, and as it dissolved very slowly it could be used many times with deadly effect. Some such glasses can be seen at the British museum.

Dysentery is always serious and often a dangerous disease, but it can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarhoea Remedy has cured it even when malignant and epidemic. For sale by Alred Drug Co.

SMALL BOY GOOD REASONER

Present-Day Conditions Applied to Biblical Incident Showed Power of Deduction.

The Sunday school class of an Indianapolis church, which was made up of small boys, was discussing Lot and how he came to be in Sodom. The teacher told how Abram and Lot had decided to separate and take their flocks and servants in opposite directions and how Lot, probably in his selfishness, had taken what he regarded as the best land, which lay in the direction of Sodom, which was afterward destroyed by fire. The teacher, a man, did not believe in clothing the talk concerning biblical characters in mystery or phrases that the small boys could not understand, but tried to make them realize that the men of biblical times were subject to the same conditions and influences as are people of today.

"Now, boys," he said, "Lot was not a real bad man. He didn't plunge into the wickedness of Sodom immediately. After he left Abram he, no doubt, lived with his family and servants in his tents far outside of the wicked city of Sodom. Then he began to go to the city occasionally. Then he went oftener, until he came to believe that it was a good place to live in. When the city was destroyed the angels of the Lord led him out of the city.

"Now, James," said the teacher, "I want you tell me in your own way how you think Lot came to be in Sodom."

"He—he lived in the country at first," replied James, "and didn't come to town at all. Then he got to coming just once in a while—on—on Saturday nights, when everybody got paid. And then he got to coming through the week, to the ball game, or things like that. And one day, maybe, he came home and said: 'Well, I saw a nice vacant house in Sodom this afternoon and I told the transfer man to come out tomorrow and get our stuff.

"That's the way I think Lot came to live in Sodom," concluded James, as he gave a long sigh and sat down.

SEVERE ON HIS OWN WORK

Granville Redmond has arrived in the foremost ranks of California's artists. Being recognized himself, after years of striving, he feels competent to pass upon the merits of his contemporary artists.

Recently he left a picture on exhibition at a San Francisco gallery. In the course of the week he went to the place to see how the sale was progressing.

Every artist therein represented fell under the stroke of his hammer—Keith, Hill, Yard, Judson, Burgdorff Short, Best, Peters, Latimer, Hansen—all came in for their share of cutting criticism. A word or two at most sufficed to finish them. Redmond made his comments the more substantial by writing them on the margin of the catalogue.

Redmond was game.

He seized his paper and, quick as a flash, wrote down his criticism:

"Damned rotten."

Sounded That Way.

Miss Brown was giving an elaborate description of a blacksmith preparatory to teaching Longfellow's poem to her pupils:

"Now children, we are going to learn a poem today about some one who works very hard. He is very large and has great arms that can lift such heavy things! His face is blackened with soot that comes from his great blazing fires! And he wears a dirty black apron and he has a fire that glows, oh, so red, and whenever he makes anything he put it into his fire and then pounds it with a great big hammer, which makes the loudest clanging noise and makes the sparks fly about in every direction. Now, who can tell me what I have been describing?"

A little maid who had listened to these vivid details with eyes twice their natural size sprang to her feet and said in an awed whisper:

"The devil."—Housekeeper.

Composite Work.

Throughout the ten years of their existence the Leggitt twins had invariably shared joys, clothes, and gifts of candy or toys. Apparently their mother, the brisk and capable guardian of seven half-orphans, never thought of them separately.

"What are you planning to do this afternoon, Martha?" asked a visiting aunt, who had witnessed a strenuous morning. "Rest, I hope."

"Rest!" said Mrs. Leggett, in a tone of scorn. "I guess not! I've got to take the twins to the dentist to have that tooth out, and then to the oculist to get a pair of glasses fitted, and then to the shoemaker's to see if he can stretch one of their boots so they can wear it without making such a fuss, and saying it hurts every time they put it on."—Youth's Companion.

Exactly.

"Do you believe that poverty is comparative?"

GHOSTS EVER BOTHER YOU?

If So, Southern Negro Folks Say These Simple Precautions Will Chase 'Em.

As a part of the folklore of the negro folks the superstitions of slavery days are of great interest. The following are some of the negro's beliefs about ghosts:

To feel a hot breath of air strike you at twilight signified the nearby presence of a ghost. Should you wish to avoid him, stop and turn your coat and trousers and hat wrong side out and the spirit cannot encounter you.

If, however, he is a pugnacious sprite and approaches despite the change, turn and address him thus: "In the name of the Lord, what do you want?" Whereupon he will tell you his business upon earth, then depart and never, never trouble you again. If, on the other hand, it is a prowling ghost who crawls under the house, bumps against the floor, makes strange sounds, and whispers in the midnight hours, you have only to put in a new floor and he will do so no more.

Some ghosts are obtrusive and will not only prowl about the house, but creep in through the crack of the door in the wee small hours of the night, and, once inside, expand to vast proportions. To spare yourself any disturbance in this way, sow mustard seed all about the doorstep just before going to bed, or place a sieve on the doorstep.

Before entering, the spirit will have to count all the holes in the sieve or all the mustard seeds, and by this time daylight will come and he will have to go. As the counting for one night will not do for another you are always safe.—Southern Workman.

ALMOST FRANTIC WITH ITCHING ECZEMA

"Eight years ago I got eczema all over my hands. My fingers fairly bled and it itched until it almost drove me frantic. The eruption began with itching under the skin. It spread fast from between the fingers around the nails and all over the whole hands. I got a pair of rubber gloves in order to wash dishes. Then it spread all over the left side of my chest. A fine doctor treated the trouble two weeks, but did me no good. I cried night and day. Then I decided to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment but without much hope as I had gone so long. There was a marked change the second day, and so on until I was entirely cured. The Cuticura Soap we have always kept in our home, and we decided after that lesson that it is a cheap soap in price and the very best in quality. My husband will use no other soap in his shaving mug." (Signed) Mrs. G. A. Selby, Redonda Beach, Cal., Jan. 15, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

"Mug" Is Overworked Word.

The most overworked word in the Englishman's vocabulary of slang is "Mug." As a noun it may mean a face, a fool, or a student who prefers reading to sport. As a verb its meanings are still more varied. It may mean to study hard, or to strike in the face. It also means to rob or swindle, and among actors to grimace or make faces. To mug up is also, in theatrical parlance, to make up.

Finally, to mug one's self is to get drunk, the resulting condition being one of mugginess. There is more obvious sense in this last use of the word than in some of the others, for alehouses, in the eighteenth century, were commonly known as mughouses. Mug is the English equivalent of the German Zug, which Mark Twain found to mean everything. A new sense of the verb "mug" in the American slang is to photograph a face.

For Forty Years a Hermit.

Isaac Sheath, who has just died in the workhouse at the age of seventy-eight, lived the life of a hermit for nearly forty years at Newport, Isle of Wight. He occupied a mud-hut which he erected on a piece of waste land in the village of Chale, but the hut became so dilapidated that the rural district council ordered its destruction. Sheath was greatly exasperated by the council's interference, and before he left for the workhouse he burned the hut to the ground. Mice and birds had grown so accustomed to the old man and his lonely ways that they used to come and feed from his hand.—London Mail.

The New Way.

"Going to your summer cottage this year?"

"No; we've decided to stay in the city."

"But I thought you were so fond of the country?"

"We used to be, but now we prefer to stay at home, where we can get fresh milk, eggs and butter every morning."

First Religious Book in America.

The first religious book published on the American continent was printed in the City of Mexico by order of the Roman Catholic bishop there. This was the first work of any kind from movable type issued in the new world and bears date 1648. In point of collaborators the most pretentious work published on this continent is "The Catholic Church in the United States," which has six thousand different contributors, all but a dozen of whom are actually identified by name with the American hierarchy.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy is to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balsam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy, the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrive in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plots. He plans uprising of negroes.

"I have never so regarded it, Solomon," said the judge mildly. "I have read a different meaning in the beef and flour and potatoes she's sent here. I expect if the truth could be known to us she is wondering in the midst of her grief why I haven't called, but she'll appreciate the considerate delicacy of a gentleman. I wish it were possible to get cut flowers in this cussed wilderness!"

The judge had been occupied with a simple but ingenious toilet. He had trimmed the frayed skirts of his coat; then, by turning his cuffs inside out and upside down a fresh surface made its first public appearance. Next his shoes had engaged his attention. They might have well discouraged a less resolute and resourceful character, but with the contents of his ink-well he artfully colored his white yarn socks where they showed through the rifts in the leather. This the judge did gaily, now humming a snatch of song, now listening civilly to Mahaffy, now replying with undisturbed cheerfulness. Last of all he clapped his dingy beaver on his head, giving it an indescribably jaunty slant, and stepped to the door.

"Well, wish me luck, Solomon, I'm off—come, Hannibal!" he said.

At heart he cherished small hope of seeing Betty, advantageous as he felt an interview might prove. However, on reaching Belle Plain, he and Hannibal were shown into the cool parlor by little Steve. It was more years than the judge cared to remember since he had put his foot inside such a house, but with true grandeur of soul he rose to the occasion; a sublimated dignity shone from every battered feature, while he fixed little Steve with so fierce a glance that the grin froze on his lips.

"You are to say that Judge Slocum Price presents his compliments and condolences to Miss Malroy—have you got that straight, you pinch of soot?" he concluded affably. Little Steve, impressed alike by the judge's air of condescension and his easy flow of words, signified that he had. "You may also say that Judge Price's ward, young Master Hazard, presents his compliments and condolences—" What more the judge might have said was interrupted by the entrance of Betty, herself.

"My dear young lady—" the judge bowed, then he advanced toward her with the solemnity of carriage and countenance he deemed suitable to the occasion, and her extended hand was engulfed between his two plump palms. He rolled his eyes heavenward. "It's the Lord's to deal with us as his own inscrutable wisdom dictates," he murmured with pious resignation. "We are all poorer, ma'am, that he has died—just as we were richer while he lived!" The rich cadence of the judge's speech fell sonorously on the silence, and that look of horror which had never quite left Betty's eyes since they saw Charley Norton fall, rose out of their clear depths again. The judge, instantly stricken with a sense of the inadequacy of his words, doubled on his spiritual tracks. "In a roundabout way, ma'am, we're bound to believe in the omnipresence of Providence—we must think it—though a body might be disposed to hold that worst Yeanpassed had got out of the line of divine supervision recently. Let me lead you to a chair, ma'am!"

Hannibal had slipped to Betty's side and placed his hand in hers. The judge [illegible]

"He would come, and I hadn't the heart to forbid it. If I can be of any service to you, ma'am either in the capacity of a friend—or professionally—I trust you will not hesitate to command me—" The judge backed toward the door.

"Did you walk out, Judge Price?" asked Betty kindly.

"Nothing more than a healthful exercise—but we will not detain you, ma'am; the pleasure of seeing you is something we had not reckoned on!" The judge's speech was thick and unctuous with good feeling. He wished that Mahaffy might have been there to note the reserve and dignity of his deportment.

"But you must let me order luncheon for you," said Betty. At least this questionable old man was good to Hannibal.

"I couldn't think of it, ma'am—"

"You'll have a glass of wine, then," urged Betty hospitably. For the moment she had lost sight of what was clearly the judge's besetting sin.

"On the advice of my physician I dare not touch wine—gout, ma'am, and liver—but this restriction does not apply to corn whisky—in moderation, and as a tonic—either before meals, immediately after meals or at any time between meals—always keeping in mind the idea of its tonic properties—" The judge seemed to mellow and ripen. This was much better than having the dogs sicked on you! His manner toward Betty became almost fatherly. Poor young thing, so lonely and desolate in the midst of all this splendor—he surreptitiously wiped away a tear, and when little Steve presented himself and was told to bring whisky, audibly smacked his lips—a whole lot better, surely!

"I am sorry you think you must hurry away, Judge Price," said Betty. She still retained the small brown hand Hannibal had thrust into hers.

"The eastern mail gets in today, ma'am, and I have reason to think my share of it will be especially heavy, for it brings the bulk of my professional correspondence." In ten years the judge had received just one communication by mail—a bill which had followed him through four states and seven counties. "I expect my secretary—" boldly fixing Solomon Mahaffy's status, "is already dipping into it; an excellent assistant, ma'am, but literary rather than legal."

"Since you insist, ma'am," the judge poured himself a drink, "my best respects—" he bowed profoundly.

"If you are quite willing, judge, I think I will keep Hannibal. Miss Bowen, who has been here—since—" her voice broke suddenly.

"I understand, ma'am," said the judge soothingly. He gave her a glance of great concern and turned to Hannibal. "Dear lad, you'll be very quiet and obedient, and do exactly as Miss Malroy says? When shall I come for him, ma'am?"

"I'll send him to you when he is ready to go home. I am thinking of visiting my friends in North Carolina, and I should like to have him spend as much time as possible with me before I start for the east."

It had occurred to Betty that she had done little or nothing for the child; probably this would be her last opportunity.

The state of the judge's feelings was such that with elaborate absence of mind he poured himself a second drink of whisky; and that there should be no doubt the act was one of inadvertence, said again, "My best respects, ma'am," and bowed as before. Putting down the glass, he backed toward the door.

"I trust you will not hesitate to call upon me if I can be of any use to you, ma'am—a message will bring me here without a moment's delay." He was rather disappointed that no allusion had been made to his recent activities. He reasoned correctly that Betty was as yet in ignorance of the somewhat dangerous eminence he had achieved as the champion of law and order. However, he reflected with satisfaction that Hannibal, in remaining, would admirably serve his ends.

Betty insisted that he should be driven home, and after faintly protesting, the judge gracefully yielded the point, and a few moments later rolled away from Belle Plain behind a pair of sleek-coated bays, with a negro in livery on the box. He was conscious of a great sense of exaltation. He felt that he should paralyze Mahaffy. He even temporarily forgot the blow his hopes had sustained when Betty spoke of returning to North Carolina. This was life—broad acres and niggers—principally to trot after you toting liquor—and such liquor!—he lolled back luxuriantly with half-closed eyes.

"Twenty years in the wood if an hour!" he muttered. "I'd like to have just such a taste in my mouth when I come to die and probably she has barrels of it!" he sighed deeply, and searched his soul for words with which adequately to describe that whisky to Mahaffy.

But why not do more than paralyze Solomon—that would be pleasant but not especially profitable. The judge came back quickly to the vexed problem of his future. He desired to make some striking display of Miss Malroy's courtesy. He knew that his credit was experiencing the pangs of an early mortality; he was not sensitive, yet for some days he had been sensible of the fact that what he called the commercial class was viewing him with open disfavor; but he must hang on in Raleigh a little longer—for him it had become the abode of hope. The judge considered the matter. At least he could let people see something of that decent respect with which Miss Malroy treated him.

They were entering Raleigh now, and he ordered the coachman to pull his horses down to a walk. He had decided to make use of the Belle Plain turnout in creating an atmosphere of confidence and trust—especially trust. To this end he spent the best part of an hour interviewing his creditors. It amounted almost to a mass-meeting of the adult male population, for he had no favorites. When he invaded virgin territory he believed in starting the largest possible number of accounts without delay. The advantage of his system, as he explained its workings to Mahaffy, was that it bred a noble spirit of emulation.

He let it be known in a general way that things were looking up with him; just in what quarter he did not specify, but there he was, seated in the Belle Plain carriage, and the inference was unavoidable that Miss Malroy was to recognize his activities in a substantial manner.

Mahaffy, loafing away the afternoon in the county clerk's office, heard of the judge's return. He heard that Charley Norton had left a will; that Thicket Point went to Miss Malroy; that the Norton cousins in middle Tennessee were going to put up a fight; that Judge Price had been retained as counsel by Miss Malroy; that he was authorized to begin an independent search for Charley Norton's murderer, and was to spare no expense; that Judge Price was going to pay his debts. Mahaffy grinned at this and hurried home. He could believe all but the last; that was the crowning touch of unreality.

The judge explained the situation.

"I wouldn't withhold hope from any man, Solomon; it's the cheapest thing in the world and the one thing we are most miserly about extending to our fellows. These people all feel better—and what did it cost me?—just a little decent consideration; just the knowledge of what the unavoidable associations of ideas in their own minds would do for them!"

What had seemed the corpse of credit breathed again, and the judge and Mahaffy immediately embarked upon a characteristic celebration. Early candle-light found them making a beginning; midnight came—the gray and purple of dawn—and they were still at it, back of closed doors and shuttered windows.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Betty Leaves Belle Plain.

Hannibal had devoted himself loyally to the judge's glorification, and Betty heard all about the letter, the snuffing of the candles and the reward of five thousand dollars. It vastly increased the child's sense of importance and satisfaction when he discovered she had known nothing of these matters until he told her of them.

"Why, where would Judge Price get so much money, Hannibal?" she asked, greatly astonished.

"He won't have to get it; Miss Betty; Mr. Mahaffy says he don't reckon no one will ever tell who wrote the letter—he 'lows the man who done that will keep pretty mum—he just dassent tell!" the boy explained.

"No, I suppose not—" and Betty saw that perhaps, after all, the judge had not assumed any very great financial responsibility.

"He can't be a coward, though, Hannibal!" she added, for she understood that the risk of personal violence which he ran was genuine. She had formed her own unsympathetic estimate of him that day at Boggs' race-track; Mahaffy in his blackest hour could have added nothing to it. Twice since then she had met him in Raleigh, which had only served to fix that first impression.

HARRIET QUIMBY PLUNGES TO DEATH

TURNED TOO SHARPLY IN THE WIND WITH PASSENGER IN BLERIOT MACHINE.

FOURTH WOMAN TO LOSE LIFE

Boston.—Miss Harriet Quimby, of New York, the first woman to win an aviator's license in America and the first woman to cross the English channel in an aeroplane, was instantly killed with her passenger, W. A. Willard, manager of the Boston aviation meet, when her Bleriot monoplane fell into Dorchester bay from a height of 1,000 feet.

The accident happened when Miss Quimby and Willard were returning from a trip over Boston harbor to Boston light, a distance of 20 miles in all. The flight was made in 20 minutes. The Bleriot, one of the latest models of military monoplanes, circled the aviation field and soared out over the Savin Hill Yacht club, just outside the aviation grounds.

Heading back into the eight-mile gusty wind, Miss Quimby started to volplane. The angle was too sharp and one of the gusts caught the tail of the monoplane, throwing the machine up perpendicular. For an instant it poised there. Then, sharply outlined against the setting sun, Willard was thrown clear of the chassis, followed almost immediately by Miss Quimby. Hurtling over and over, the two figures shot downward, striking the water 20 feet from shore. They splashed out of sight a second before the monoplane plunged 15 feet away.

It was low tide and the water was only 5 feet deep. Men from the yacht club in motor boats were on the spot quickly and, leaping overboard, dragged the bodies out of the mud into which they had sunk deeply.

Each body was badly crushed. Several of Miss Quimby's bones were broken and there were many large bruises. Willard, who weighed 190 pounds, hit the water face first and over one eye there was a gash from which the blood was flowing. He, too, sustained several fractures and bruises. The clothes of both flyers were torn. The bodies were so covered with mud that it was several minutes before the doctors and nurses could determine the full extent of the injuries.

Miss Quimby is the fourth woman to lose her life in an aeroplane accident. The first woman killed was Madame Denis Moore, who fell while flying in France in July, 1911.

Tube Company Damaged.

Detroit.—Fire that for a time threatened destruction to many buildings destroyed the plant of the Detroit Seamless Tube company causing a loss of nearly $300,000.

Naval Officers Are Retired.

Washington.—Several naval officers were retired on their application, thus reducing to 12 the number of officers who must compulsorily retire.

Fire Destroys Mill.

Kenora, Ontario.—The Rat Portage company's sawmill and power plant here, together with several thousand feet of lumber in the immediate vicinity were completely destroyed by fire. The damage is over $300,000.

House Helps Army.

Washington.—The House adopted a resolution appropriating $1,250,000 to provide for the participation of the regular army in the encampment and maneuvers of the organized militia of the several states.

On Land and Sea.

"Circumstances alter cases even in human nature."

"Yes. Take Jorkins, for instance. He's one of those grandiose Chesterfields who would give up his seat in a lifeboat to a woman, and then make an attempt to lead the saloon orchestra in 'Nearer, My God, to Thee' as the ship sinks."

"I see. On land, Jorkins is the fellow at 6 o'clock who horns through the women and children and gets a window seat in his home-bound street car."

Chamois Rag Enough for Two.

An upper grade teacher in one of the Kansas City schools was cleaning the blackboard with a large piece of chamois.

"My, but you use a large chamois!" laughingly remarked another teacher.

"Yes, and it's large enough for two. Use it whenever you need it."

"Oh, you don't think I have that much cheek?"

Two elderly chess fanatics were absorbed in a game at the Mechanics' institute in San Francisco recently. Both were experts and rigid followers of all the rules of the game, written and otherwise. For nearly five hours neither had spoken a word. Backward and forward, moving and countermoving, the game swung, with no perceptible advantage to either player. Finally one of the old fellows made a fatal break. Quick as a flash his opponent moved his knight into position and softly murmured, "Check!"

"What's the matter?" demanded his friend. "Going to quit?"

"I certainly am. I'll be hanged if I can play chess with a darned old chatterbox!"—Saturday Evening Post.

INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

First Lawyer—How often was Mr. Millions married?

Second Lawyer—Can't tell you. The notices of contests over the estate have only just begun to come in.

What Difference Did It Make?

Walking behind some colored girls, homeward bound from school, in a Missouri town once upon a time, a visitor overheard the following unblushing and giggling, rich-voiced and sparkling-eyed assertion of individuality from one of them: "Yeh, she kep' me in, but I don' know inny mo' 'bout Caesar now 'n I did befo' han'. An' ef she kep' me in twel Gabriel blows his horn I wudden know an' I wudden care. What diffunce it make to me what ol' man Caesar done away yandeh befo' de waw!"—Evening Post.

Melody Sometimes Becomes Malady.

That persons have very diverse ideas and tastes in music was exemplified in an incident at a pupils' vocal recital lately. A young woman was having quite a struggle with a song and one woman in the audience said to her companion:

"Isn't that a beautiful melody?"

The other looked bored and said:

"It sounds more like a malady to me."

Astonishing Experience.

"If any one had told me," murmured the great mammal, bitterly, "that I would find a man ready to jump down my throat, I never would have swallowed it whole."

Snappy Age.

The young man breezed into the old man's library.

"I met your daughter," he announced, "at a Fifth avenue reception. I want to marry her next Friday afternoon at 3:30. She's willing."

"Which daughter?" he asked.

"It's Miss Ethel."

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientific for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to pass into oblivion all those unreasonable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell of cures all we should like to tell upon in this short article, but those who would like to know more about the wonderful healing powers of this remedy will be supplied with full particulars post free by sending a postcard to The Chemical Mfg. Co., Manchester Road, Bradford, Yorks, England. Therapion is sold by all Druggists at 1/1½, 2/9 and 4/6 per box, and we would advise all sufferers to give it a trial. Remember, it is a French discovery, and is known as THERAPION—Be sure to get it. Therapion is also sold in the United States and Canada at 50c, $1.00 and $2.00 per box.

ALTITUDES IN UNITED STATES

The differences between the eastern and western elevations in this country are curiously striking. Colorado has 40 peaks that are more than 14,000 feet about sea level. Mount Washington, in New Hampshire, and Mount Mitchell, in North Carolina, the highest peaks in the Appalachian system north and south, respectively, are considerable less than half as high as this above the ocean.

Most large cities lie low. Chicago is only about 600 feet above sea level, and Pittsburgh but 100 feet higher. Philadelphia ranges from sea level to a height in its suburbs of some 300 feet. Minneapolis, near the head of the Mississippi, has an elevation of less than 1,000 feet, and various parts of New Orleans at the mouth of the great river are recorded in the government tables as having elevations of from one to fifty feet. St. Louis lies about half way between these terminal cities.

CHANCES FOR THE STUDENT

We have student mechanics in all the large factories and student miners in all the great mines. There are student trainmen on all the trains and student superintendents in all the offices.

Soon we shall have student senators in the senate and student representatives in the house. A student judge will sit on every bench and student attorneys will assist every lawyer.

Student social learners will attend every function and student soldiers will accompany the troops. The White House will have to be enlarged to make room for about 1,000,000 student presidents, for nearly every mother in the United States will want to send her son to the White House to learn how to be president.

Student brides and student grooms will attend every wedding ceremony and student ministers will accompany the minister on his parochial calls.

It might be interesting to know just what a student lover's privilege would be, but there is no doubt that a few lessons are sadly needed by some young persons.

The Perfect Laxativ For Elderly Peo

Age has its attractions no less than youth in a more serene and quieter life. But it is this very life of rest without sufficient exercise that brings with it those disorders that arise from inactivity. Chief of these are a chronic, persistent constipation.

Most elderly people are troubled in this way, with accompanying symptoms of belching, drowsiness after eating, headaches and general lassitude. Frequently there is difficulty of digesting even light food. Much mental trouble ensues, as it is hard to find a suitable remedy. First of all the advice may be given that elderly people should not use salts, cathartic pills or powders, waters or any of the more violent purgatives. What they need, women as well as men, is a mild laxative tonic, one that is pleasant to take and yet acts without griping.

The remedy that fills all these requirements, and has in addition tonic properties that strengthen the liver and bowels, is Dr. Caldwe Pepsin, which thousands of el ple use, to the exclusion of remedies. Trustworthy people Comstock, 1420 Baronne St., Ne La., and J. B. Martin, Summ say they take it at regular and in that way not on tain general good health, but have not in years felt as goo do now. You will do well have a bottle of it in the hou good for all the family.

Anyone wishing to make a t remedy before buying it in t way of a druggist at fifty ce dollar a large bottle (family have a sample bottle sent to free of charge by simply addr W. B. Caldwell, 405 Washi Monticello, Ill. Your name a on a postal card will do.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PLEASING LETTER.

My short visit to Chilton was a surprise and a delight to me. I was surprised at the splendid farming I saw. The farmers are evidently reading and exchanging views, and putting into practice the information they gather. I have seen nowhere in Alabama neater and better farms for they were as clean as well-cultivated gardens.

I was especially struck with the terracing. Instead of the unsightly terrace, grown up in weeds, briers and broom sedge, the best row of cotton or corn was on the terrace. I have seen that nowhere else in the State. Improved impliments I saw, in general use, by which one man can do the work of several under the old system.

Your great crowds of well-behaved, thoughtful young people was a delight to behold.

I congratulate you on the ministers conference you have organized. I was especially glad to strike hands with brethren I had never seen. The assembling of the preachers together once a month, or quarter, will be most profitable in the good fellowship which is certain to follow.

As we know each other better, and learn of the problems each have to solve, our sympathy grows and extends to one another. The discussions in the meeting must tell powerfully on the work of the Lord. The exchange of ideas promotes intellectual growth. Heart to heart talks among the ministers, before an audience of their people will give them an insight into the the preacher's life and work they would never know.

We make improvement in farming, in teaching, and even in politics, why not improvement in the ministry? No one of us, however old or learned, or experienced, knows it all. Looking back over my long life, I bless God most for what I have learned, and the goodly fellowship I have enjoyed by association with my ministerial brethren.

I felt it in my heart to write these lines to each of the brother ministers it was my good fortune to meet.

Blessings on you in the great work before you.

Your fellow laborer in Christ,
W. B. CRUMPTON.

HAMPTON SCHOOL HOUSE.

The healh of this community is very good at present.

The school at this place is progressing very nicely under the careful management of Prof B. F. Boockholdt.

Mr. Oscar Kelley and his sister, Sudie, were the guests of Miss Minnie Kicker Saturday night.

Several of the Autauga people went to Vida to the picnic the Fourth and report a nice time.

The Rev. Hastings, Miss Millicent Mitchell, Mr. William Strock and his sister, Marjorie, were the guests of the Misses Strock Saturday night.

Mr. E. J. Hooper, of Montgomery, visited his parents July 4th and remained until Sunday evening.

Mrs. Woods is visiting her sister, Mrs. Emma ilEltgnon.

Mrs. Johnnie Rollison, of Prattville, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper.

Mrs. Myrtle Williams, of Clanton, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Barbour.

Brother Rogers will fill his regular appointment at this place Sunday afternoon.

We will close with much love for The Union-Banner and its many readers.

THREE GRUMBLERS.

IS IT SO?

Editor Union-Banner:

It reaches me that our commissioners and judge have levied the same property tax that was levied last year, which ignores the right of a majority and that $8,000 is to be given to a road from Clanton to Maplesville.

Now, I hope the above is not correct, but if it should be so, I think it unfair. Think of it! First levy a tax against the will of those who have to pay and take it and fix a road for some of our people and leave some of us in the hole. Now, think of it! One needs help the same an another, and we will not be satisfied if we are not all treated alike.

But, surely the above is not correct, for I don't see how any set of officers could treat its subjects with so much treason as is reported.

Let me ask our commissioners, is it correct? And if so, I would give each beat its pro rata share.

Now, this letter is not written to slur or slander, for I sincerely hope that it is all false.

Yours for fair treatment.

S. E. WALDRUP.

CELEBRATON.

On the morning of July 4, at the home of W. B. Foshee, two miles west of Clanton, people began to gather under the shade trees and about 11 o'clock there had gathered about 95 persons and it seemed just like one family had met to celebrate this great Independence Day.

At 12 o'clock a most bountiful dinner was spread and we had all kinds of cold drinks and ice cream, and also a string band and we all danced and made it a day that will long be remembered. It will be a green spot in the memory of old and young.

Among the visitors at the picnic were: Mr. L. J. Morris and Mr. Franklin of Montgomery and Mrs. J. H. Willoughby and little son, Clyde, and Etta and Mattie Lee Candler of Birmingham.

Most of the people left for their homes about 5 o'clock, but the young people stayed and danced and made it an enjoyable day.

It was Mrs. J. H. Willoughby's 59th birthday.

We left for home at 10 o'clock that night, thanking Mr. and Mrs. Foshee for their kindness shown us through the day, also thanking the people there for their good behavior. So I will ring off.

PROVIDENCE.

The people of this community enjoyed a safe and sane Fourth with a picnic at the baseball grounds. Mr. John Martin was master of ceremonies and everybody had a good time. It was good to see the neighbors all in such harmony with each other. Of course, the main thing was the dinner. And such a dinner! You have heard about tables groaning under their load of good things, well this one did sure enough. And after every one had eaten there were more than 12 basketsful of fragments taken up.

The main feature of the entertainment was a ball game played between the Providence first nine and the second nine with Garner & Wooley of Enon and Ruddy Brothers of Calera. One game was played in the forenoon and one in the afternoon. The score in the first game was in favor of the second nine, 11 to 7. The first nine took the second game, 11 to 3.

Providence has a strong team and challenges any neighborhood team for a game.

Rev. Wallis preached at Providence last Sunday at 11 o'clock and at Mt. Moriah at 3:30 to pretty good crowds.

We are having lots of rain and the green grass grows all round.

At the election for school trustees last Saturday Messrs. John Martin and Tom Watson were re-elected and Mr. Jim Harrell was elected in the place of W. A. Sims, resigned.

On our visiting list this week we have Sam Peeples and family, J. N. Knox and family and Mrs. Brasier, all of Shelby county, at their father's, Mr. J. M. Peeples.

Mrs. R. C. Skipper and daughter, Miss Clara, of Anniston, are visiting relatives and friends here at their old home at Oak Grove.

Mrs. C. N. Matheny and daughters, Misses May and Emmele, of Anniston are with Mr. R. E. Matheny this week.

Mr. Ross Davis and family, of near Jemison, were at W. J. Watson's for the week-end.

Mr. Eddie Martin, of the L. & N. R. R., spent last week with home folks here.

The young folks and the old folks enjoyed an ice cream supper at J. M. Peeples' last Friday night.

Last week you made us say Oak Ridge. It should have been Oak Hill. It was my mistake, but the names are so much alike, I hope there was no harm done.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

School opened Monday morning with very good attendance, with Prof. J. J. Mims and Miss Beulah Vance as teachers.

We are glad to say that Miss Katie Duncan is recovering from the fever.

Mr. Aaron Dennis and family visited friends and relatives here last week.

Misses Annie and Betty Patterson spent last Thursday with Misses Nettie and Lula Thomas.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Littlejohn and Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Littlejohn spent the Fourth at J. A. Logan's.

Mr. W. J. Patterson and family visited at G. P. Thomas' Sunday.

Mr. Joe Smith and family, of Maplesville, spent part of last week with his son, D. J. Smith.

W. J. Blankenship and family spent Sunday with the family of T. J. Smith.

Mr. Fulton Kinkay and sister, Miss Sadie, spent a few days last week at J. P. Smith's.

Mr. C. R. Deason and family have gone to Coosa County to see his mother, who is quite ill.

Mrs. John Harris, of Cooper's, is spending the week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Silas Kelley.

J. H. Duncan's store at Lomax was broken into last Thursday night, but as far as could be ascertained nothing was taken away. It is supposed that something frightened them away before their work was completed.

Sunday school will begin at 2 o'clock next Sunday afternoon. After Sunday school there will be singing in the Sacred Harp and Harmony. Everybody is invited and especially the singers. We are expecting to have Prof. J. A. Blankenship and others with us.

Yours truly,
LITTLE VIEWER.

SUNDAY'S ARRESTS.

Sylvester Whatley, against whom there is pending in the Circuit Court eleven indictments for illegal sale of liquor; Tom Broadhead, charged with carrying concealed weapons and assault to murder; Atkins Whatley charged with assault to murder, were arrested by Sheriff Jones on last Sunday morning and placed in jail at Clanton. The arrests were made at the camps near Riderville and only after the dogs from Speigner were called into requisition.

SHADY GROVE.

The all-day singing at Shady Grove church on July 4th was certainly a success in every way. Every one seemed to enjoy the good singing together with the good dinner, and I can truthfully say I have never enjoyed a singing any more myself.

We cannot say too much in praise of such days spent in song service, where the purpose as in this case was to honor God.

Truthfully, we have never heard better singing any where, any time, any place.

Meeting called to order at 10 o'clock by N. J. Jones.

Devotional exercise by E. L. Jones.

Next business was to apoint committee on arrangements. Committee consisted of W. B. Jones, N. J. Jones and S. M. Yates.

Recess, 15 minutes.

N. J. Jones then entertained the class for 20 minutes, followed by J. M. Williams, 25 minutes.

Adjourned for dinner.

At 1:30 o'clock the meeting was called to order by the chairman.

First A. L. Robinson entertained the class for 25 minutes and was followed by J. M. Williams.

N. J. Jones closed the day's service with the grand old song, "Nearer My God to Thee."

J. A. JONES, Secretary.

Money-Making Made Easy.

During these strenuous times one is at a disadvantage if sick or bilious. An occasional dose of St. Joseph's Liver Regulator (either liquid or powders) will strengthen and brighten the entire person, thus keeping one in trim for the battles of life. Druggists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50c a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25c a box. Give it a trial and satisfy yourself of its splendid regulating qualities. Don't forget the name—"St. Joseph's." Take no other.

MARS HILL.

Editor Union-Banner:

Rev. W. P. Lowery filled his regular appointment at this place Saturday and Sunday and preached a good sermon to a very large congregation.

The baseball games at Thorsby Thursday were fine. The game in the morning between Mars Hill and Clanton ended with the scare of 8 to 5 in favor of Mars Hill. Jemison and Mars Hill were to play in the afternoon, but Jemison would not cross bats with the Mars Hill boys. So they had to play Clanton instead. The score in the afternoon game was 9 to 8 in favor of the Mars Hill team.

After returning home we heard that Clanton said that we didn't win the game, but the Mars Hill team got the money just the same. If we had brought the score card with us we could have changed the scores to suit ourselves.

Come on Clanton with your $8.00 pitcher. You haven't done anything yet.

A PLAYER.

ENTERPRISE.

Health here is good except Mr. Sorrell he has been on the sick list for the past week. We hope for his speedy recovery.

We had a good rain here Thursday night which was of great benefit to the crops. Crops are growing nicely. I see that some of the cotton is dying of blackroot.

W. S. Beaird spent Thursday night with T. G. Robinson.

Miss Fannie Yeargan spent Thursday night with the Misses Boockholdt. The Misses Silas Yeargan and Willie Bates were the guests of the Misses Boockholdt Thursday afternoon. All had a grand time.

Some of our young people went to Mountain Creek the Fourth and had a delightful time.

The entertainment at Mr. W. T. Johnson's Thursday was just simply grand. Everybody enjoyed the day. Robinson brothers spent the day at Mineral Springs and report a good time.

Mr. Ed Hammond's boy while in contact with a mad dog was bitten. The boy is now in Montgomery for treatment.

Miss Monnie Boockholdt will be engaged in teaching at Mount Pisgah for the next two months.

Messrs. J. T. Traywick, H. T. Traywick and W. T. Mahan spent Friday night with T. G. Robinson.

Several people of this community went to White Pond Sunday and had a very good time.

Some attended prayer service at Evergreen Sunday night.

Help For Those Who Have Stomach Trouble.

After doctoring for about twelve years for a bad stomach trouble, and spending nearly five hundred dollars for medicine and doctor's fees, I purchased my wife one box of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, which did her so much good that she continued to use them and they have done her more good than all of the medicine I bought before.—Samuel Boyer, Folsom, Iowa. This medicine is for sale by Alred Drug Co. Samples free.

Chilton County Singing Convention.

The Chilton County Singing Convention will meet at Liberty Hill on the third Saturday and Sunday (July 21 and 22) instead of the first Saturday and Sunday. All singers and lovers of music invited.

R. A. SMITH, Secretary.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC.

The Evergreen Sunday school gave a picnic to the school at this place on the Fourth, 80 members of the Sunday school being present. The picnic was held at the Soldiers' Home, near Mountain Creek. All went in wagons, each teacher with their class seperate.

The school was given a hearty welcome by the old soldiers upon arrival.

A delicious lunch was next enjoyed by all. The school next assembled at the auditorium where they enjoyed an interesting talk by the Rev. J. C. Abernethy and also a short talk by T. E. Williams. The school left the home late in the afternoon after enjoying the day as never before.

We will note that the Evergreen Sunday school is doing better work than ever before, which is due to the large number of workers in the school.

Wishing all much success and asking God's blessings on all Sunday school workers.

STARTLING FACTS ARE BROUGHT OUT

PRESENT SYSTEM OF JUDICIAL PROCEDURE AIRED BY REFORM COMMITTEE.

JUDICIARY BOARD MEETS

Hear Reports From Sub-Committees and Make a Report to the Governor.

Montgomery.—Members of the commission on judiciary reform met in the supreme court chamber at Montgomery July 11 to hear reports from the sub-committees and to make a report to Governor O'Neal. The meeting was called by Judge John Pelham, chairman. There are 30 members of the commission which was appointed by Governor O'Neal in the spring with instructions to formulate some plan to simplify the legal procedure and reform the judiciary of Alabama.

The commission had its first meeting May 23 in Montgomery, when various sub-committees were appointed. It is not known whether the commission will have completed its work with the close of this week's meeting. The plan is to present the system to Governor O'Neal who will in turn make recommendations to the legislature when it convenes again.

Startling facts about the present system of judicial procedure were brought out at the meeting of the committee on judicial reform, Judge John Pelham, chairman of the central committee, declared that data secured by his committee since its organization show that in one county the solicitor is being paid $2,400 a year for four weeks' work and that in another the solicitor draws a yearly salary for six week's work and that in the third, the prosecutor's work comes every eight weeks.

Associate Jutice Thomas C. McClellan of the supreme court recommended that the system of procedure in the supreme court be altered so that each justice can review each case rather than have one write an opinion to be concurred in or rejected by other members of the court. The recommendations of the central committee will be included in Governor O'Nal's call for an extra session of the legislature if the executive thinks a special meeting of the law makers is necessary.

REFUSES TO CANCEL ORDER.

Requests Special Term of Lauderdale Court to Investigate Murders.

Montgomery.—Governor O'Neal has refused to cancel his order to Judge Charles P. Almon of the Lauderdale county circuit court to hold a special term to investigate recent murders.

In a telegram to protesting citizens the governor declared: "There is but one method by which the alarming increase of homicides in the state can be checked and that is by the celerity and certainty of punishment. And that he was only doing his duty when he ordered the extra session, he declared that, "In view of the appalling conditions existing the slight inconvenience which may result from a special term to prospective witnesses or jurors is insignificant compared to the importance of protecting human life in Alabama."

Governor O'Neal said that after he had ordered the special term that the responsibility is upon the court and solicitor.

Hundreds of Rats Killed at Mobile.

Mobile.—Hundreds of rats found in the holds of the schooner M. A. Achorn and the steamers Signe and Santanderine, three vessels from Havana, were destroyed by health officials at the quarantine station here, as a precaution against the introduction of bubonic plague. In accordance with instructions received from Surgeon General Blue of the public health and marine hospital service, officials refused to allow either of the boats to dock when they had been fumigated and admitted to port. They must remain in midstream until all rats infesting them are destroyed, and there is no possibility that a germ carrying rodent can get ashore.

Lawyers Take Examination.

Montgomery.—Applicants for admission to the Alabama bar were examined at the state capitol. The examinations were conducted by the state board of examiners in the supreme court library. The examining board is composed of Thomas E. Knight of Greensboro, chairman; J. Winter Thorington of Montgomery and W. F. Dickinson of Opelika.

Will Attend Atlantic City Meeting.

Montgomery.—W. S. Kellar, State Highway Engineer, has been instructed by the State Highway Commission to attend the annual meeting of the National Association for the Improvement of Roads. The meeting will be held at Atlantic City, N. J., late in September. Mr. Kellar will be the official representative of Alabama.

Cullman.—The Cullman County Teachers' institute closed one of the most successful sessions that has ever been held in the county.

WORKERS ARE INCREASED

Church Membership Gains—More Than $4,000 Increase in Home Missions.

Montgomery.—The books of the Alabama Baptist state board of missions closed July 5, showing a gratifying year's work. The total amount for the year for state missions is $24,117, of which about $10,270 was received during June.

During the year there have been employed by the state board 120 workers, including missionaries, teachers, colporters, evangelists and assistants. More literature has been distributed than in any previous year of the history of the board. The colportage department has put more Bibles, religious books and tracts in the hands of the people than ever before. More associations have missionaries this summer than ever before. These are in co-operation with the state board. They are chiefly students from college and seminary. The policy of the board is to give employment to every ministerial student during the vacation, whether in college or seminary.

Most gratifying has been the work of the woman's department, under the skillful leadership of Miss Mallory and her assistants.

During the year just closed there were added in the state by baptism 10,955 members, against 9,706 of the previous year. From 1890 there was a gain of white Baptists in Alabama of 65.4 per cent ,and since 1906 a gain of 18.5 per cent, with a total to date of 192,627.

THREE CONTRACTS APPROVED.

State Highway Commission Holds Regular Meeting.

Montgomery.—Approval of contracts for work on State-aid roads in Randolph, Chambers and Limestone counties, and disapproval of the contract let for road work in Washington county was the principal feature of the quarterly meeting of the State Highway Commission. It was held that the awarding o the Washington county contract was irregular.

Quarterly report to the Commission was made by W. S. Kellar, State Highway Engineer. It showed that surveys for State-aid work have been made in the following counties:

Applications for appropriations for State-aid work have been made by the following counties:

Members of the State Highway Commission are Robert E. Spragins, of Huntsville, chairman; Victor B. Atkins, of Selma; John Craft, of Mobile; Dr. Eugene A. Smith, of Tuscaloosa, and Professor G. M. Mitcham, of Auburn. Mr. Spragins was the only member absent from the meeting, he having been detained by the courts.

STATE TO RECOVER LANDS.

State Land Agent Declares 480 Acres in North Alabama Not Recorded State's Property.

Montgomery.—Alabama owns 480 acres of land which are not recorded according to State Land Agent W. J. Martin, who returned from North Alabama. In two adjoining counties Mr. Martin found three-quarters of a section of land which he declares is the state's property. The tract is a part of the original sixteenth section school lands which were given the state when it was admitted into the union. Several years ago school trustees leased the land, but both lessees have died and the land is in the possession of persons who have no title.

Other investigations will be conducted by the same land department. The land agent is withholding the names of the counties for the present. Mr. Martin says he will attempt to recover the property.

Alfalfa in Alabama.

Montgomery.—The lands of the Black Soil Belt, of Alabama, are among the best in the United States for the growing of alfalfa. Although alfalfa is a comparatively new crop in this state 500 farms were already growing it in 1910, and the number is increasing rapidly. In the mild climate of this state the first cutting is generally ready about the first part of April, and as many as six cuttings are sometimes obtained.

In the fall of 1908, an alfalfa club at Uniontown, Ala., paid a dividend of 60 per cent, and in 1909 one of 104 per cent. This club raised alfalfa on rented land. Four to six tons per acre is a common yield in this state. Since this experiment the growing of alfalfa in Alabama has steadily increased.

Odd Fellows' Convention.

Decatur.—The Independent Order of Odd Fellows held a district convention here July 9 and 10. The sessions were held in the Odd Fellows' hall, New Decatur. The district is composed of the lodges of the following counties: Morgan, Cullman, Limestone, Madison, Jackson and Lawrence.

There were a number of the state officers and other members of the order of high rank present at the meeting.

THIRTEEN CHARGES AGAINST ARCHBALD

JUDGE OF COMMERCE COURT IS DECLARED TO BE UNFIT FOR BENCH.

COMMITTEE IS UNANIMOUS

Archibald Is Accused of Using High Office For Personal Profit.

Washington.—Chairman Henry D. Clayton, of the committee on judiciary, presented to the house thirteen articles of impeachment against Judge Robert W. Archibald, of the United States court of commerce. Mr. Clayton's report was unanimous from his committee.

It constitutes the ninth impeachment of a judicial or civil official of the United States since the foundation of the government and is the first since the impeachment trial of Judge Charles Swayne, of the northern district of Florida, who was acqquitted February 27, 1905.

"The conduct of this judge has been exceedingly reprehensible and in marked contrast with the high sense of judicial ethics and probity that generally characterizes the federal judiciary," the committee said in summing up its findings of misbehavior in office against Judge Archbald.

His business transactions while a judge were held to unfit him for further service on the bench. A resolution was presented impeaching him and haling him for trial before the United States senate.

"Your committee is of the opinion that Judge Archbald's sense of moral responsibility has become deadened," said the report. "He has prostituted his office for personal profit. He has attempted by various transactions to commercialize his potentiality as judge. He has shown an overwhelming desire to make gainful bargains with parties having cases before him or likely to have cases before him. To accomplish this purpose he has not hesitated to use his official power and influence.

"He has degraded his high office and has destroyed the confidence of the public in his judicial integrity. He has forfeited the condition upon which he held his commission and should be removed from office by impeachment.

"A judge should be the personification in integrity, of honor, and of conversation. He should be free and unaffected by any bias born of avarice and unhampered by pecuniary or other improper obligations."

With Chairman Clayton's report was a resolution which designated Chairman Clayton, Representative Floyd, of Arkansas; Davis, of West Virginia, and Webb, of North Carolina, democrats, and Representatives Norris, of Nebraska; Sterling, of Illinois, and Howland, of Ohio, republicans, managers to prosecute the Archbald trial before the senate.

The impeachment charges against Judge Archbald range from his business transactions with actual and possible litigants in his court to a trip to Europe, which, it was charged, was given the judge by Henry W. Cannon, a railroad magnate of New York. Favoritism to a railroad magnate was also included in the charges and in the thirteenth count the committee reviewed and found that Judge Archbald "grossly abused the proprieties of his said office of judge, was guilty of misbehavior and of misdemeanor in office."

CAMORRISTS GUILTY.

Nine Convicted on Charge of Murder Remainder of Belonging to Criminal Association.

Viterbo, Italy.—The Camorrists, who have been on trial for nearly two years on the charge of having murdered Genaro Cuocolo and his wife in June, 1906, were adjudged guilty in varying degrees. The verdict declares Corrado Sortino guilty of both murders; Nicolo Morra, Antino Cerrato and Mariano di Gennaro guilty of murder of Cuocolo and Guiseppi Salvi guilty of the murder of Cuocolo's wife. Enrico Alfano, the alleged leader of the Camorrists; Giovanni Rapi di Marinas, and the others are convicted of being implicated in the crime and members of a criminal organization.

The president of the court immediately sentenced the condemned men, Sorinto, Merrato, Salvi, Morra, di Gennaro, Alfant and di Marinas were sentenced to 30 years' imprisonment and to 10 years' police surveillance each. The rest were sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment each.

When the accused men were placed in the iron cage to hear the verdict di Marinas suddenly drew forth a piece of glass and cut his throat.

He fell to the floor in a pool of blood and general pandemonium broke loose.

Di Marinas is in a serious condition.

The verdict as a whole proved somewhat of a surprise, and all are agreed that the severity of the sentence is the last blow to the Camorra, which practically has been quieted since the arrest of the leaders.

JOHN'S FRIENDS WERE LOYAL

The bridegroom of three months bade his wife adieu one morning and started on a business trip to a town 25 miles distant. The journey was to be made by automobile and he promised to return in time for seven o'clock dinner as usual.

But no husband appeared when dinner was served and the anxious wife watched the hands of the clock as they journeyed on and announced that the hour was midnight, and still the husband failed to appear. The frantic wife sent telegrams to six friends of the groom living in the town where he might have gone, asking if he was spending the night with them. As dawn appeared a farm wagon drove up containing a farmer and the missing husband and furnishing motor power for a broken down automobile that trailed behind. Almost simultaneously came a messenger boy with an answer to one of the telegrams, followed at intervals by five others and all of the telegrams said:

"Yes, John is spending the night with me."

In loyalty what surpasses man?

Why be constipated when you can get Garfield Tea at any drug store? It will quickly relieve and its benefits will be realized.

Exceptions.

Power of Vegetable Growth.

A tar macadam pavement stretching from the school of gunnery of Shoeburyness to the sea is at present in a state of violent if silent eruption, says the London Globe. About a fortnight ago the surface became covered with what may be called "blisters," raised a little above the common level, which attracted much wondering attention.

From each of these, in a few days, a series of cracks appeared, extending themselves in rays from a center. Finally came up a broad, soft shoot, looking extremely well pleased with itself and its work, which proved to be so old and well known a friend as the thistle. At this moment there are hundreds of those bold intruders showing defiantly through the pavement affording a most interesting illustration of the power of vegetable growth.

Two Indispensable Supports.

Of all the dispositions and habits that lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports.—George Washington.

Same Purpose Accomplished.

"Oh, George!" exclaimed a fond mother, when she saw her small boy considerably battered up and dirty, "you have been fighting again! How often have I told you that you shouldn't fight?"

"Well," said he, "what are you going to do when a fellow hits you?"

"Why, keep out of his way," said the mother.

"I bet," said the youngster, "he'll keep out of mine after this."

Ruling Spirit Still Strong.

Mrs. J. L. Story, who has just published a volume of reminiscences, tells of a lady relative who had all her life been afraid of damp sheets. When she was dying Mrs. Story entered the room, to find the fireplace barricaded with a large assortment of bed linen. She was having her winding sheet warmed.

"I never have lain in damp bedclothes while I was alive," said the old lady in a feeble whisper, "and I'm not going to do it when I'm dead."

NOW THEY'RE ENEMIES.

AMERICANS ARE HELD PRISONERS

FINALLY RELEASED BY ORDER OF OROZCO'S FATHER—TROUBLE OVER CHECK.

COL. GARIBALDI RESIGNS

Jarez.—Twenty-five Americans, including American Consul Thomas D. Edwards were held in the office of the Mexican Northwestern railroad here for nearly two hours, while an armed guard of rebels prevented them from leaving the building.

Rebel officials had become angered at the officers of the Mexican northwestern, on account of the alleged worthlessness of a $5,000 check, payable to the rebels as an export duty on a consignment of gold ore by the American smelting and refining company, in Chihuahua. The shipment had arrived in El Paso, but when the rebels attempted to cash the $5,000 check, banks in El Paso refused payment.

American Consul Edwards went to the Northwestern offices to confer with H. C. Ferris, general manager of the road, Thomas Ryan, traffic manager and C. T. Carson, general auditor. The officials were in conference when they suddenly found the doors of the building surrounded by armed men. In the same building were the offices of Waters-Pierce Oil company. American employes of that firm were not permitted to leave at the usual hour.

There were forty persons in the building, fifteen being Mexicans.

American Consul Edwards telephoned for Colonel Pascual Orozco, Sr., head of the garrison, who arrived in a few minutes and ordered the guards to release all minor employes. The officers of the road were held. After a long conference the American consul left, but the railroad officials were closed with Orozco for some time.

"I was not detained against my wishes," said American Consul Edwards. I merely went to the Northwestern offices to investigate the trouble over the check. I was in conference with the railroad officials when we decided to call on Colonel Orozco. The armed guards said they would permit me to pass but not the railroad officials, so we telephoned to Colonel Orozco to come and see us."

Mr. Edwards said he informed Colonel Orozco that the Northwestern officials were blameless.

Garibaldi Resigns.

Agua Prieta, Mex.—Gen. Guiseppe Garibaldi, grandson of the famous Italian liberator, resigned as commander of the volunteers recruited by the Mexican government to repel the rebel invasion of the state of Sonora. The incident revealed the serious plight of the government defensive campaign in Sonora.

Garibaldi disagreed with General Augustin Sanjines, commander in chief of the zone, as to the best means of keeping rebels from overrunning Sonora.

General Sanjines is at Colonia, Morelos, where the Mormon colony is in daily dread of rebel ravages. Mormon colonists will resist attacks, according to Ira Langlon, a Morman from Colonia, who arrived here.

All-Winter Fox Hunt.

Macon, Ga.—T. R., in his famous hunt in the jungles of Africa, has nothing on T. J. Roberts of Anderson, S. C., who passed through Macon following a winter's fox hunt in Florida and south Georgia. Mr. Roberts was in a two-horse wagon, to which was attached a dog kennel consisting of twenty "hound dogs." In the wagon were seventy-five fox skins, the fruits of the chase. These fox hunts are annual events with Mr. Roberts, but he remained out later than usual this year.

MORE HOSPITALS ARE NEEDED

Situation Improved, But Further Work Is Needed to Stamp Out Tuberculosis.

Only four states, Mississippi, Nevada, Utah, and Wyoming, have no beds whatever in special hospitals or wards for consumptives. Eight years ago when the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis was organized, there were 26 states in which no hospital or sanatorium provision for consumptives existed, and the entire number of beds in the United States was only 10,000.

"While these figures would indicate a remarkable growth in anti-tuberculosis activity," says Dr. Livingston Farrand, executive secretary of the National association, in commenting on the subject, "there are still practically ten indigent consumptives for every one of the 30,000 beds, including those for pay patients. In other words, we have from 250,000 to 300,000 consumptives in this country too poor to provide hospital care for themselves. If tuberculosis is ever going to be stamped out in the United States, more hospital provision for these foci of infection must be provided."

Where He Drew the Line.

An English earl, lately deceased, who had no family, was notorious for his hatred of children, and on one occasion he engaged as lodge keeper an army pensioner named McMicken. Some few months later McMicken's wife presented him with a son and heir. On learning of the occurrence his lordship rode down to the lodge in a terrible rage.

"I hear," said he to Mr. McMicken, "that your wife has a son."

"Yes, my lord," said the man proudly.

"Well, now, look here, McMicken; when I put you here, it was to open and shut a gate, but by the Lord Harry, not to propagate."

The Doghouse.

"The doghouse!" shouted a bellman at the Congress hotel to the key clerk in asking for the key to the room to which he was taking a convention guest.

"Hold on there," snapped the guest, Henry Valkenstein of New York. "What's this 'doghouse' mean? Think I am an animal?"

"That's all right," said Clerk John Burke, soothingly. "It's only a nickname the boys have for the room I gave you, which was K-9."

"Oh, I see," said the guest; "K-9—canine; good joke on me, eh?"

The detective says his after thoughts are the best.

GOOD NIGHT'S SLEEP

No Medicine So Beneficial to Brain and Nerves.

Lying awake nights makes it hard to keep awake and do things in day time. To take "tonics and stimulants" under such circumstances is like setting the house on fire to see if you can put it out.

"For about three years I had been a great sufferer from indigestion. After trying several kinds of medicine, the doctor would ask me to drop off potatoes, then meat, and so on, but in a few days that craving, gnawing feeling would start up, and I would vomit everything I ate and drank.

"When I started on Grape-Nuts, vomiting stopped, and the bloated feeling which was so distressing disappeared entirely.

"My mother was very much bothered with diarrhoea before commencing the Grape-Nuts, because her stomach was so weak she could not digest her food. Since using Grape-Nuts food she is well, and says she don't think she could do without it.

"It is a great brain restorer and nerve builder, for I can sleep as sound and undisturbed after a supper of Grape-Nuts as in the old days when I could not realize what they meant by a 'bad stomach.' There is no medicine so beneficial to nerves and brain as a good night's sleep, such as you can enjoy after eating Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A call has been issued for the new "Progressive Party" for a mass meeting to be held at Birmingham on Wednesday, July 24th, for the purpose of selecting twelve delegates to attend the convention called to meet in Chicago on August 5th and for the transaction of any other business that may come before said mass convention.

And now comes a queer tale from Washington that a petition is to be presented to President W. H. Taft requesting him to withdraw from the race for the presidency. According to the same authority another petition is to be made to Theodore Roosevelt asking him not to go farther with the candidacy, and there is to be a general agreement upon a new man to run for president backed up by the united Republican party of the country. It is a queer tale and we do not take much stock in it.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

The tenth annual Round-Up Farmers' Institute, the farmers' summer school, will be held at Auburn, Ala., from August 1 to 10, 1912. Round-trip fares will be issued from all prominent points.

TRY GIVING JOY TO OTHERS

Shedding of Sunshine Will Be Found to Have Good Effect on Those Who Practice It.

It was Mr. Barrie who quaintly said: 'Women who bring sunshine into the lief of others cannot keep it from themselves."

That is a recipe to learn and apply. If you will not try to be a spreader of joy for the joy it gives do so from selfish motives.

Girls may think this farfetched. Their one thought is to snatch at joy for themselves. It takes experience, perhaps bitter experience, to learn that the joy that counts most is the one with a rebound. Like a rubber ball, the harder you throw it the quicker it returns.

The girl who starts on a joy quest for herself cannot say: "I'll be nice to poor Maria, she has had such a stupid time," and then go about her sunshine shedding with patronizing airs. She may give joy, but the chances are that her patronage will be felt and resented. The sunshine that counts glows in the heart and must come out.

One need not go into sunshine societies to bask in the rays of joy giving. Nor need that sunshine be for outsiders. Sunshine-shedding, like charity, can profitably begin at home. It is not so exciting, perhaps, to try to brighten the lives of mother or small brother or sister as it is to be a Lady Bountiful, but the reflex action is quite as strong.

Try shedding sunshine wherever you are. Do not let a day pass without doing some little thing to brighten that day for some one else, and you will find your day more joyful.

NEW INDUSTRY AT THORSBY.

Popped peanuts are as much superior to those prepared by ordinary methods as popped corn is better than parched, and this is the newest wrinkle in nut confections.

Mrs. S. E. Norton, a resident of Thorsby, after six months of patient and persistent endeavor, has discovered (and applied for a patent) on a method of cooking peanuts, by immersing in pure vegetable oil for a brief period, determined by the temperature of the oil that is attained, which has been found by practical experience to produce the most satisfactory results at 450 degrees Farenheit, but may range from 300 to 500 degrees. The intense heat instantly sears the outer surface of the nut and causes it to expand until it explodes, breaking up the starchy substance of the kernel and splitting the delicate skin, but, on account of the immersion in the oil, the nut, though greatly enlarged, retains its contour.

The product is crisp and tender, entirely unlike peanuts prepared by the ordinary methods, which, on account of their hardness and toughness, are notoriously indigestible, because few people will chew them enough to prevent swallowing hard lumps, which irritate the digestive organs.

When subjected to this new process the nuts are as easily masticated as pop corn, fairly melting in the mouth, and are easily assimilated, even by persons with delicate stomachs.

It has long been known that peanuts, when subjected to heat, improve in flavor, up to a ceratin degree, after which, if the heat is not removed, rapidly deteriorate. This point has been determined in the new process with scientific exactness, the temperature being governed to a degree and the time to a second, with the result that all the good qualities are retained and the flavor is unexcelled.

As no word could be found in the dictionary that would provide a suitable name for the new process, Mr. Norton invented a new word to describe or christen his invention; he calls it "POPNUT," and has devised a unique design, which has been adopted as a trade-mark. Popnut will be packed in parchment paper bags, securely sealed and enclosed in attractive cartons that retail at 5c each. Mr. Norton has formed a partnership with his oldest son, Mr. Sereno O. Norton. They are fitting up a building at Thorsby to be used as a factory and expect in about ten days to be prepared to furnish the trade with salted or chocolate popnut.

Value of a Chevalier.

A Parisian court has just decided as to "the value" of a chevalier of the Legion or Honor. Injured in the Avenue de l'Opera by an automobile, a former dealer in merchandise, decorated with the Legion of Honor, died in 1911, following the accident. His heirs brought suit for damages against the chauffeur and the owner of the auto. Maitre Gondinet, the advocate of the owner of the auto, maintained that the ex-dealer in merchandise, old and without occupation, furnished no material to his heirs for damages. Maitre Nogueres, the advocate for the plaintiffs, said he had no difficulty in recognizing the damage, though unable to produce any document to establish it, and that Maitre Gondinet, for the defense was himself a member of the Legion of Honor and in default of any other evidence that itself was an indication of value to the heirs. The court held with Maitre Nogueres and allowed 25,000 francs damages to the heirs of the former chevalier of the Legion of Honor.

"A Pig in a Poke."

A pig poker is a dealer in pigs—not the large and portly fellow whom you meet now and again at the country market with a cargo of a hundred or more pigs of all ages, shapes and sizes for sale, but a little man, who for the most part carries his wares upon his back, or occasionally perhaps in a wheelbarrow. A "poke" of course is a pocket or sack, and a pig poker therefore is one who deals in pigs carried round from place to place in a poke. The old proverb anent the foolishness of "buying a pig in a poke" has its origin of course in this time-honored method of pig purveying.—London Globe.

THE NEW CATALOGUE

State Normal College at Florence, Alabama

The list shows many of the leading and professional men and women of the state. Scarcely a community but can point to one or more of them.

The enrollment last year was 540, representing all parts of Alabama and several other states.

Alabama is to be congratulated on having such an institution within its borders.

"SCOTTY'S" MINE IS A MYTH

"Death Valley Scotty" told a Los Angeles grand jury the other day that the president of a life insurance company had grubstaked him for years, and that a New York mining engineer put up the $10,000 which Scotty paid for the special train in which the Death Valley man made his spectacular trip across the continent several years ago.

Scotty also testified that he had tried to persuade the officers of the Death Valley Scotty Gold Mining and Developing company to locate a few mining claims in Death Valley, in order to give the mining scheme the appearance of genuineness, but alleged that they refused to do so, saying it was unnecessary.

Scotty told the grand jury that his "hole in the ground down in Death Valley" is a myth, which has been used for years to fill the pockets of the promoters.

With the exception of F. C. Goodwin, the secretary of the company, and its treasurer, Goldworthy, the officers of the mining concern, have apparently dropped from sight.

Scotty's confession contained this other bit of interesting history:

He never located a mine, either in the Panamint range, the Funeral mountains, or anywhere else; he never owned a mine,, was not a miner, his only role was to make a big splurge, to advertise himself as the spectacular and unbridled spendthrift while all the time cunning schemers were formulating plans upon which they should profit by this show.

And all Scotty got, he says, was an amount of money that could not be dignified by a loftier title than a "hand out."

Scotty said the most he ever had at one time was $3,000, and that the yellow complexioned roll he carried was upholstered with one-dollar bills.

MAJOR-GEN. LEONARD WOOD

A word just at the present moment might not be out of place concerning Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, U. S. A., who is also, as everyone knows, an M. D. A writer has called him "One result of the Spanish war." Major General Wood is a New Hampshire man, and he was born in Winchester in that state just 52 years ago. And he is also a Harvard man with his two degrees of M. D. and LL. D. He was an assistant surgeon stationed in Washington when Mr. Roosevelt was assistant secretary of the navy. They rode together and they were both crack shots, and the best of friends. It is said that the Rough Riders was the inspiration of the then Dr. Wood, and that at the breaking out of the Spanish war such a regiment of men who knew how to ride and how to shoot—plainsmen and cowboys—was organized. And in it were mustered a number of New York clubmen of fashion, who were fond of outdoor sports. The only son of the late Nicholas Fish, the late "Ham" Fish, who was killed in the charge at San Juan Hill, was in this regiment. The story is historic. After the war Dr. Wood was made governor general of Cuba and became a brigadier general in 1901. Two years later he was made major-general by President Roosevelt. After that came his experience in the Philippines, then followed his appointment as commander of the department of the east, and then chief of the general staff.

MR. CHUNG, CHINA'S MINISTER

Greatly to the surprise of the diplomatic prophets, Dr. Wu Ting-Fang was not sent as minister from the Chinese republic to Washington, but Mr. Chung Mun Yew, the former Chinese coxswain of Yale, appeared as the first minister of the new republic. No explanation was forthcoming as to why the change had been made, and although Dr. Wu and his charming wife are missed, yet Mr. Chung is well known at the capital, and has many friends in the state department and among the diplomatic corps. He comes to this country with an established record at Yale, for he was a member of the winning boat crew that fluttered the magic blue pennant. It is also said that he was never far behind upon that popular American game that has something to do with holding a "full hand"—for poker is one of the classics at Yale. He absorbed American ideas at college and was very popular among his classmates. He is a delightful conversationalist, and speaks with very little, if any, accent. In 1908 Mr. Chung officially visited the United States as special ambassador from China to thank this country for the return of the Boxer indemnity fund. With the same keen interest in American affairs that characterized the popular Dr. Wu, the new Minister Chung is already a favorite. He tells the story of his country's transition from empire to republic in fragmentary conversation that thrills with the interest of a real romance. Mr. Chung feels that the great future of his country is now dawning, and he declares that it all began with a few Chinese boys who found their way to American schools and began to dream of an Oriental republic.

RENE BAZIN SUBMITS A RECIPE

Rene Bazin never cared for the superman nor even for the overcivilized type of man. He never used the word eugenics. Science and matter are to him negligible factors when they are not supplemented by culture and the spirit.

In these days, when every one is greatly concerned with anthropoculture, Bazin had to come forth with his little recipe for breeding good human specimens.

"The man whom tomorrow will demand," he said in a recent address, "is the thorough and fearless man, the man who will do his work well and for whom life will have no terrors. The training of this man will require the same methods as the training of a Christian, for if there ever is a superman he will be a Christian. If there is a nobility whose ranks are open to all it is the nobility of Christianity, which decrees perfect equality to every soul in every field of endeavor and under any circumstances. A mind is very incomplete, a heart is very weak, if they are swayed by [illegible] only. Whoever fails to feel the religious urge unless one-half of life and one-half of love [illegible] standing one-half of history."

TOGA STRIPPED FROM LORIMER

BY VOTE OF 55 TO 28 SENATE DECLARES HIS ELECTION INVALID.

HE SPOKE TWELVE HOURS

Lorimer Says He Is a Victim of Conspiracy, and Intends for the World to Know the Whole Truth.

Resolution That Drove Lorimer Out of Senate.

This was the resolution which drove Lorimer from the senate. He was not expelled, although the two-thirds vote necessary to do so was available. His title to his seat was declared invalid.

"Resolved, That corrupt methods and practices were employed in the election of William Lorimer to the senate of the United States from the state of Illinois and that his election was, therefore, invalid."

Washington.—By a vote just short of 2 to 1, the senate expelled William

WILLIAM LORIMER.

Lorimer, junior senator from Illinois.

After a sensational struggle extending over two years, this representative of one of the greatest states in the Union, in the senate of the United States, was told that his election was tainted by bribery and corruption, and that his title was, therefore, invalid.

When the resolution of Senator Luke Lea of Tennessee was adopted by a vote of 55 to 28, practically 2 to 1, Mr. Lorimer walked out of the chamber, stripped of his toga and consigned by his colleagues to the obscurity of private life.

After an impassioned speech of three hours and a half in a crowded room, where the heat and humidity was stifling, Mr. Lorimer closed his speech in his own defense

Standing in the center of the middle aisle the almost exhausted man raised both hands to heaven and followed them with his eyes as he exclaimed:

"No, I will not resign! No, no! If I go from this body it will be because more senators vote in favor of that resolution than vote against it. My exit will not be from fear. It will not be because I am a coward. It will be because of the crime of the senate of the United States."

The vote was taken at the conclusion of the twelve-hour speech, covering three days, during which Lorimer had proven himself a master of dramatic methods. Ignoring the usual course of appeal in judicial cases of this character, subordinating logic and cumulative argument to the achievement of climacteric effect, he played upon the emotions not only of the people in the galleries, but of senators on the floor of the chamber. When, flushed with exertion, his collar limp about his neck, he stood with outstretched arms and head thrown back and said in a hoarse, quavering voice, "I am ready," a tremor of excitement ran through the chamber and not a few women and some men wiped away tears.

Cloudburst Strikes Alton, Illinois.

St. Louis.—Four persons were drowned at Alton, Ill., by a cloudburst which destroyed two miles of streets, wrecked six buildings and the gas plant of the Alton Gas and Electric company, with a total property loss of $250,000. The cloudburst followed a spectacular storm which lasted all night. Three times it passed over Alton, flooding streets and cellars each time. The third time rain fell in torrents, sending a wall of water 9 feet deep through the street.

Cuban Consul Dead.

Savannah, Ga.—A. S. Moyseio, formerly prominently identified with the struggles of Cuba for independence and latterly Cuban consul at Savannah, dropped dead at his home here. He was about 60 years of age, married, the father of two children and wealthy. At one time, the story is told, Moyseio was so hotly pressed by his Spanish enemies in Cuba that he was rolled in a barrel by his friends and shipped out of the country with [illegible] years.

IOWA FAVORS ROOSEVELT

REGULAR REPUBLICAN CONVENTIONS DECLARES THE CHICAGO CONVENTION FRAUDULENT.

DesMoines, Iowa.—The efforts of Governor Carroll, a Taft adherent, to have the Republican state convention pass a resolution indorsing the platform adopted at the national convention, failed, being tabled, 773 to 342, and his effort to eliminate from the report of the majority of the resolutions committee the section condemning as fraudulent the Chicago convention also failed. The progressive controlled the convention throughout.

Neither Taft nor Roosevelt were mentioned in the resolutions adopted which commend "Republican achievements and indorse progressive policies."

Governor Carroll precipitated a demonstration for Roosevelt which lasted for more than twenty minutes when he said the national Republican platform was not tained, but was adopted regardless of whether the delegates were aligned with Taft or Roosevelt.

Resolutions adopted include a request that the legislature submit the question of votes for women to the people and indorsed direct nomination of president, vice president and United States senators.

NATIONAL EDUCATORS MEET

Fairchild Chosen Head of Educators Over Miss Strachan.

Chicago.—Electing as president E. T. Fairchild of Topeka, Kan., after a heated contest, in which Chicago teachers were severely criticised by New York members for "behind the curtain tactics," the National Educational association, representing more than 15,000 educators, went on record as favoring:

Promotion of international peace.

An investigation of teachers' salaries throughout the country with reference to the high cost of living.

A uniform Federal law for marriage and divorce.

Extension by congress of plans for training in agriculture, domestic economy and other industrial work in various institutions.

Greater attention in public schools to health of pupils.

To study rural education, city school administration, vocational education and hygiene and higher education, including the training of all teachers.

More attention by teachers to the individual necessities of pupils for a training that will fit them for a definite occupation in life.

That a greater spirit of altruism be inspired in school work.

Tramps Play Ball.

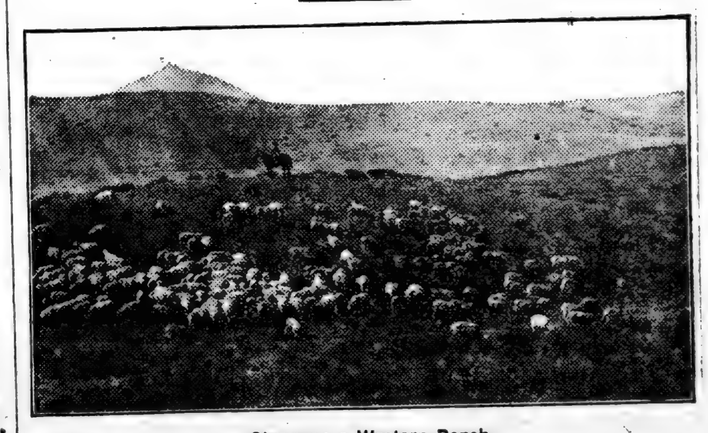
Wilkesbarre, Pa.—The baseball diamond took over the functions of a court here in connection with the conviction of 80 tramps recently arrested by the police of Plymouth borough. When the tramps were arraigned before Burgess W. D. Morris, the burgess, who is an enthusiastic baseball fan, ordered that the men be divided into equal squads from which two teams were selected to play a full nine-inning game on the town common. The winning squad were to go free, but the losers to work.

Postoffice Clerk for President.

Louisville, Ky.—James P. Hawkins of Louisville, who was arrested in Washington and sent to Washington asylum hospital after offering himself as the compromise candidate for president on the Republican ticket, was a clerk in the Louisville postoffice more than 12 years. He resigned a few months ago after announcing in the local papers that he would be a candidate for president on the Republican ticket. He [illegible]

PROFITABLE MANAGEMENT OF SMALL FLOCK OF GRADE EWES

One of Daintiest of Animals Will Live and Grow Fat Where Cow Would Starve to Death—Aim to Have Lambs Come in January or February, the Earlier the Better.



Sheep on a Western Ranch.

(By R. B. RUSHING.)

Four years ago I purchased a piece of land adjoining my farm which was, to say the least, one of the worst rundown pieces of land in the country, with noxious weeds of all kinds, the burdock being very rank.

I turned in my sheep and in a few weeks they had the burdock eaten right into the ground.

The sheep, while it is one of the daintiest of animals, will live and grow fat where a cow would starve to death. I usually make two cullings of my flock each year; one in the spring and one in the fall.

In the spring I cull out all the ewes that do not bring lambs or those that do bring them and for some cause fail to raise them, unless those ewes are of extra quality and promise well in the future.

In the fall I cull out and ship off all the old and weak ones, also fatten and ship the wether lambs during the fall and winter, thus my spring culling is light and my fall culling heavy. However, I consider both important.

I make a point to always buy the best registered rams I can find. There is nothing gained in using a "cheap ram" on a flock of grade ewes.

If you want to raise early lambs, that is, winter lambs, you must be thoroughly prepared and clearly understand the business. It means sleepless nights, nursing bottles and warm blankets. But lambs usually bring a good price in the market, which I think pays for the trouble of raising them.

I aim to have my early lambs come in January and the first of February—the earlier the better. My ewes are kept in good, thrifty condition, both before lambing and after.

Here is where many fail to have what is called "good luck" with sheep. I se many flocks after they bring their lambs, either early or late, turned out in the early spring and that is all that is thought necessary. Consequently they become thin in flesh and run down from sucking.

Thus, when the breeding season comes again, they are in no shape for service, and if they do get with lamb at all, the chances are they will bring a weak lamb. "Bad luck" follows of course.

You can plainly see that the real trouble lies in their care and handling at all times. They must be made to take plenty of exercise and not be housed until just before lambing time, except in stormy weather, then it is well to have a shed provided for them to go under during the summer storms.

When lambing time comes I watch my ewes very closely and am obliged to be with them both day and night almost continually. Of course at this time I keep them in a good, warm barn.

I fence off little pens about six feet square and put a ewe and her lambs in by themselves for two or three days until the lambs have become strong enough and sufficiently acquainted with their mother to know her and find her when turned in with a number of ewes and lambs in a large place provided for them in the barn.

Of course talking about winter lambs may seem a little out of season now, but now is the proper time to be thinking of that very thing for it will not be many months before the breeding season will be here and then if the flock is not in proper condition for breeding, the winter lamb business will prove a failure.

It is an excellent plan for every farmer to put up every fall a quantity of oats straw to help out in carrying the sheep through the winter. Wheat straw will answer the purpose but it is not as good as oats straw.

Of course straw is not an ideal feed for sheep. It contains little nutriment, but not much and a great deal of food fiber, but clean oat straw fed sparingly in connection with roots or other succulent feed helps out wonderfully.

Placed in the rack with clover hay it will be pretty well eaten up every day and it undoubtedly saves some grain.

Where a farmer has plenty of grain and little roughage oat straw will help to piece out the ration admirably.

If fed in large quantities it will almost certainly produce stomach trouble and this should always be avoided.

DESTRUCTION OF OLD FRUIT TREES

Traveling Timber Buyers Buy Them Up for Manufacture of Tool Handles—They Should be Spared.

(By J. H. HAYNES.)

There seems to be a disposition on the part of the farmers to ostracize the old standbys of years ago. It seems like a sacrilege to do so.

Some traveling timber buyers went over our country buying old apple trees for the manufacture of tool handles. Their story was that the trees were worthless for fruiting and the price they paid would replace the old trees with young stock.

The grandfather of the writer planted an orchard (seedlings) 80 years ago. He gave his children the privileges of choosing a tree and naming it.

One of the boys called his tree "Bill's Apple." This tree is still living and bearing. So is the boy who named it.

One other of these seedlings that was top-grafted with the Pound Pippin is still bearing. Enough wood was taken from these two old trees to make a gavel to be used by the presiding officer at the annual meeting of the descendent of the old pioneer.

Last August over 200 of these children and grandchildren met to commemorate the memory of the planter of these two old trees and this gavel was presented to the society.

Some four or five miles from where these trees stand is a pear orchard all seedlings planted at the same time by another pioneer named Harter. These trees are in fair condition yet, and although seedlings, the fruit is good.

Our motto is spare the old landmarks. A young tree six years old that grew from a graft from a tree 276 years old bore an apple last year and we are sure the fruit was of the same quality, appearance, etc., as the fruit that grew on the original tree in the orchard at Boston, Mass.

Grape Cuttings.

Plant grape cuttings in the spring as early as the ground can be worked.

FORAGE-PLANT SEEDS IMPORTED

The Secretary of Agriculture is calling attention to the Seed Laboratory which has examined a considerable number of lots of forage-plant seeds imported into the United States during 1911 and found that many of them consisted of seed of low vitality and high weed-seed content, said:

"The analyses of 18 seed lots of seed of alsike clover, red clover, white clover, and hairy vetch, amounting to 225,780 pounds, showed that the pure seed consisted of only 44.9, 64.2, 51.2, and 23 per cent, respectively, of the consignment, while the germination was as follows: 38.8, 37.0, 30.5, and 77 per cent, respectively. Consequently, though this seed was imported at a cost of $7.47, $7.97, $17 and $3.82 per 100 pounds, respectively, the actual cost of 100 pounds of seed that germinated was $44.35 for alsike clover, $34.66 for red clover, $111.86 for white clover, $23.29 for hairy vetch, or from two to four times the market price of seed of the very best quality.

"A special examination of seed of alsike clover and red clover imported from Canada during 1911 showed that approximately one-half was unsalable for seeding purposes in that country, the seed control act there prohibiting sale when more than a prescribed number of noxious seeds are found to the pound. One lot of seed of alsike contained less than 50 per cent of pure seed, germinating only 15 per cent, or 7½ per cent of the entire bulk. This particular lot contained approximately 135,000 weed seeds in each pound."

Leads in Cranberries.

It is claimed that Massachusetts leads the cranberry output, with an average crop of about 440,000 bushels annually; New Jersey is a close second with about 350,000 bushels; and Wisconsin ranks third with an output of about 150,000 bushels.

FONDNESS FOR THE DANCE

German Peasant Will Trudge for Miles in Hot Weather to Enjoy the Amusement.

The German peasant loves his pipe and his beer, and on a Sunday afternoon his game of Kegel; but on high days and holidays he likes to be dancing. He and she will trudge for miles to dance at some distant village inn. You meet them dressed in their best clothes, walking barefoot and carrying clean boots and stockings. How they can dance in tight boots after a long, hot walk on a dusty road you must be a German peasant yourself to understand. The dance I remember best took place in a barn belonging to a village inn in Bavaria. I went with several English friends to look on at it, and the men of our party danced with some of the village girls. The room was only lighted by a few candles and it was so crowded that while everyone was dancing everyone was hustled. But we were told that anyone who chose could "buy the floor" for a time by giving sixpence or a shilling to the band. Two of the Englishmen did this and the crowd looked on in solemn approval while they waltzed once or twice round with the pretty granddaughters of our hosts.—From "Home Life in Germany," by Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick.

DRAW YOUR OWN CONCLUSION

Man May or May Not Have Been Henpecked, but Here Are Facts Vouched for by Grouch.

A couple of old grouches at the Metropolitan club in Washington were one night speaking of an old friend who, upon his marriage, took up his residence in another city. One of the grouches had recently visited the old friend, and, naturally, the other grouch wanted news of the benedict.

"Is it true that he is henpecked?" asked the second grouch.

"I wouldn't say just that," grimly responded the first grouch, "but I'll tell you of a little incident in their household that came within my observation. The very first morning I spent with them our old friend answered the letter carrier's whistle. As he returned to us, in the breakfast room, he carried a letter in his hand. Turning to his wife, he said: "'A letter for me, dear. May I open it?'"—Lippincott's.

VARIETIES OF EELS.

There is the broad nose eel, and then again there is the sharp nose eel. The great difference between these two varieties is that the broad-nosed eel is the male and the sharp-nosed eel is the female, both being really of one and the same family. When summer comes young eels by the millions school from midocean shore and wriggle up our rivers. Out at sea young eels are as clear as glass and as thin as ribbon. They are about four inches long, with a little head. The young eel seems not to eat at sea and only loses its glassy look and becomes colored as it gets to shore within reach of a river.—New York Press.

MORE ON THE BREAD QUESTION.

Because the coarser-grained breads are less easily digested—or possibly not so completely digested—is not, of itself, sufficient to condemn them. Many of the foods most difficult to digest give us the greatest amount of nourishment. When you weigh the one over against the other, the argument will, after all, be in favor of the coarser foods—the foods containing the greatest amount of nutriment.

THE COLLECTION.

"I suppose, like all amateur fishermen, you caught a lot on your last fishing trip?"

"Didn't I, just! I caught the last train, a severe cold and a lecture from my wife."

PHOSPHORESCENCY.

"But you have just been worrying because your wife agreed to meet you here more than an hour and a half ago."

Paddington—Say, dear, what's worrying you?

HER GREETINGS FROM TAFT

Small Girl Gets the Message, With a Ducking by Imaginative Brother.

When President Taft spoke in Ridgewood, N. J., one of the interested listeners was Foster Sanford, Jr., the ten-year-old son of the Yale football coach. Foster's smaller sister, Mandy, wanted to go, but she was told she was too young. She forgot her disappointment, however, when her brother returned and told her that the president had sent her his love. Taking advantage of his importance, the boy has been steadily adding to the message from the president ever since.

A few days ago, shortly after Mandy had been carefully dressed for the evening, she went down into the yard where her brother was sprinkling the lawn with the garden hose.

"Mandy," said the boy, "the president told me to tell your fortune."

"Yes, he told me that before very long you were going to get wet."

She did not have long to wait. Running into the house with her new hair ribbon and what had been fluffy skirts dripping water, she screamed:

"And he said the president told him to do it."—New York Evening Post.

FINDS A CURE FOR CHOLERA?

French Physicians in Tunis Are Now Using Injections of Bacilli to Stop the Plague.

The Paris Matin says that the physicians at the Pasteur institute at Tunis have achieved success with the new prophylactic method of treating Asiatic cholera. Briefly it consists of injection of the commas-bacilli found in the intertines of cholera patients. It is said that the blood thereby becomes extremely rich and renders persons immune from the contagion. Three physicians, Nicolle, Coner and Conseil, experimented on themselves and also swallowed the bacilli. Dr. Reux, in reporting the matter to the academy of sciences said that even if the efficacy of the experiments were not proved they were interesting and deserved to be followed up.

THE DIFFERENCE.

Senator Dixon, during the squabble about convention seats for Colonel Roosevelt's friends, told a reporter that there was a startling difference in the way the committee treated one side and the other.

"It is as startling, as ludicrously startling," he said, "as the difference between a farmer and an agriculturist.

He paused, then said impressively:

GOOD WORK OF WOMEN.

Although women have only been admitted to the school boards of Wurttemberg for the last two years, and the women teachers have only exercised the school suffrage for the same length of time, they have already improved the school conditions of that kingdom very considerably. It was through their efforts that special housekeeping schools were opened for girls, while the raising of the school age and the compulsory attendance at the evening schools till the age of eighteen years was reached may also be accredited to their presence on the board.

FAULTY EDUCATION.

"Has he ever wrapped a motor car around a telegraph pole at three o'clock in the morning?"

"I think not."

"Then he has a great deal to learn."

UNABLE TO SEE ANY HOPE

Eleventh Hour Had Passed and There Was No Consolation for the Sorrowing Wife.

An old minister in South Wales told a story once to Pastor Thomas of the Washington Avenue Congregational church which illustrates the verity of the saying that it is folly to be wise where so much consolation can be gained from ignorance, says the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.

The preacher told him, "I was called to visit an old women very illiterate and ignorant of spiritual things, a short time after the death of her husband, who was noted for his learning, his enmity to the Christian ministers and his capacity for drink.

"Fearfully she told me that it was not his loss, but his unpreparedness for death that so concerned her. Then I called her attention to the thief who obtained forgiveness on the cross at the eleventh hour, after he had sincerely repented.

"'Possibly,' I said, 'your husband had mercy and forgiveness at the eleventh hour.'

"The old woman paused in her weeping, looked at an old clock in the corner, hesitated, and then said in a broken-hearted tone, 'That's the trouble, Mr. Jones, it was after twelve on that clock when he died and it was only fifteen minutes fast. I wish now that it had been an hour ahead of time. Then there might have been some hope.'"

DIFFERENT

She—Was he tastefully dressed? He—No; just fashionably.

BIRD MIGRATION.

The rate at which some birds can migrate under favorable conditions is extraordinary, and as one listens to their plaintive cries coming from the darkness overhead it is difficult to realize that in a few hours these same birds may be within the arctic circle and little later may be even crossing the pole itself. . . . Less is known of the actual dates of the departure of the migratory birds in autumn than of those of their arrival earlier in the year, and this for obvious reasons. The way in which our most charming songsters silently skulk out of the country in the autumn is very different from that in which they make their triumphal entry in the spring when every wood and copse resounds with their melodies.—Windsor Magazine.

HIS IMPRESSIONS.

C. E. Foadick, secretary of the Automobile club, was complaining in New York about the scarcity of good inns and hotels to be found on country automobile trips.

"I met a man the other day," he said, "who had just returned, brown and rather thin, from a long tour through the remoter parts of the middle west.

"'Well, what impressed you most on your trip?' I asked. 'The scenery? The resources?'

"'No; the tough beefsteaks,' he answered, 'the canned vegetables, stale eggs, strongish butter, exorbitant bills and disobliging waiters.'"

[illegible]

"Well," remarked the scientist, "this political controversy is pretty severe, but I suppose it might be worse."

"How?"

"Why, they might try to bring up that argument about the discovered the north pole."

TRUE COURTESY IN GERMANY

The German has not only been taught the other courtesies, but he has been born with a kindness of heart and instinctive consideration for others which make his formalities of real value. The man who appears to have a fund of "small change and valueless attentions is the same man who will go miles out of his way to do you a favor tomorrow."

Only a few weeks ago I was traveling in the same train with a young lieutenant, whose smooth and graceful manners had more than once aroused suspicion in my English soul.

He was got up in his newest and finest uniform; he had on spotless white kid gloves, an eyeglass thrust in his eye; he looked, in fact, the verest dandy, who would not soil himself to save a life.

The train was very full, and presently an old peasant fellow came in with his basket of vegetables, and looked about helplessly, treading on everybody's toes in the meantime. I looked on my military neighbor and waited for the storm. The dandy arose, saluted gravely, offered the weary old peasant his seat, and went and stood outside.

If there is anything in thought telegraphy, that young officer must have heard me apologizing to him all the rest of our journey together.—"My German Year."

In these days of high cost of living, a medicine that gets a man up out of bed and able to work in a few days is a valuable and welcome remedy. John Heath, Michigan Bar, Cal., had kidney and bladder trouble, was confined to his bed, unable to turn without help. "I commenced using Foley Kidney Pills and can truly say I was relieved at once." His example is worth following. Upchurch Drug Company.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Enameling.

The process known as enameling is not of modern origin. On the contrary, it goes back to a venerable antiquity. If you will read up on the subject you will learn that excellent enamel is still preserved on some of the bricks that have been found among the ruins of old Babylonia and Assyria, which have been placed back as far as the seventh or eighth century B. C. Beautiful glazes were made by the Egyptians as early as the sixth dynasty. The Greeks and Romans were acquainted with the art of enameling, as the museums of the world clearly show. It would pay you to visit such institutions in your own city.

MOUNTAIN CREEK

Last Saturday evening a difficulty occurred between Bob Scot and Will Coburn, the city marshall, when the latter was struck with a stick across the back of the neck, inflicting a pretty serious injury. It appears that Mr. Coburn was attempting to arrest Sid Scott, son of Bob, when the trouble arose.

Sunday morning Deputy Sheriff Ed Smitherman went down to Mountain Creek and both Bob and Sid Scott were placed under bond of $500 each.

On the night of the Fourth, during the electric storm, the barn belonging to Mr. John Donovan, living about five miles south of here, was struck by lightning and destroyed. He also lost two milch cows.

There is some talk of the L. & N. R. R. Co. removing our depot to Marbury, but we hope the report will prove groundless, as it would cause great injury to our growing town.

CARRIED FIRE FROM POWDER

Bravery and Presence of Mind of British Soldiers That Averted a Terrible Disaster.

On the taking of Siudad Rodrigo, in 1812, by the British army under Wellington, Captain William Jones of the 52nd regiment, having captured a French officer, employed his prisoner in pointing out quarters for his men. The Frenchman could not speak English, and Captain Jones—a fiery Welshman, whom it was the fashion in the regiment to term "Jack Jones"—knew no French; but dumb show supplied the want of language, and some of the company were lodged in a large store pointed out by the Frenchman, who then led the way to a church, near which Lord Wellington and his staff were standing. But no sooner had the guide stepped into the building than he started back, crying "Sacre blue!" and ran out in the utmost alarm. The Welsh captain, however, went on, and perceived that the church had been used as a powder magazine by the French; barrels were standing round, samples of their contents lay scattered on the pavement, and in the midst was a fire probably lighted by some Portuguese soldiers. Captain Jones and the sergeant entered the church, took up the burning embers brand by brand, bore them safely over the scattered powder, and out of the church, and thus averted the most terrific disaster.

Woodchuck's Name.

One of the most noticeable traits of woodchucks is the throwing up of large piles of dirt in front of their burrows. It is from this practice that the woodchuck got his name. In olden times—probably in the time of Aesop—the lower animals used to live in one happy country with a judge over them, the dog. One day a rabbit whose burrow adjoined that of a marmot complained to the latter that the rabbits' eyes were continually filled with the dirt which he threw out of his burrow. The marmot paid no heed to this remonstrance, and the rabbit was compelled to appeal to the judge. His honor immediately sent word to the offender that greater care must be taken in the future. But the insolent marmot, notorious for his incivility and indifference, replied to the messenger that he "would chuck" his dirt just where he pleased.

That settled it. The dog has been hunting for the gross offender ever since, and the name "woodchuck" has stuck to the whole tribe of marmots.—Brooklyn Standard Union.

First Encyclopedia.

The most ancient attempt at what is called in these days an "encyclopedia" was Pliny's "Natural History." This old work, a very high authority throughout the Middle Ages, is really a remarkable production and well deserves the fame that for so many ages belonged to it. Pliny, who died in 79 A. D., was not a naturalist, a physician or an artist, and did not pretend to be the wisest man of his time, yet such was his interest in knowledge that he devoted the leisure hours of a busy public life to compiling the work which did a vast amount of good in the world and paved the way for the comprehensive encyclopedias of the present time.

of shoes has just arrived in our store. This is an enormous quantity for any store to buy at one time but the trade that we are building through the sale of shoes that are thoroughly reliable justifies us in buying the above quantity.

Middle aged ladies as a rule have tender feet and we cater to this trade especially by carrying several shapes that combine stylishness and thorough comfort. As for prices, we believe that a quick sale at a small profit is better for the customer and better for us than carrying goods in stock a year or so at a high profit. We solicit your shoe trade especially. If you have never bought a pair from us, in justice to yourself look over our line next time before buying. SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrives in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion.

"Miss Betty, he's just like my Uncle Bob was—he ain't afraid of nothing! He totes them pistols of his loaded—if you notice good you can see where they bulge out his coat!" Hannibal's eyes, very round and big, looked up into hers.

"Is he as poor as he seems, Hannibal?" inquired Betty.

"He never has no money, Miss Betty, but I don't reckon he's what a body would call pore."

It might have baffled a far more mature intelligence than Hannibal's to comprehend those peculiar processes by which the judge sustained himself and his intimate fellowship with adversity—that it was his magnificence of mind which made the squalor of his daily life seem merely a passing phase—but the boy had managed to point a delicate distinction, and Betty grasped something of the hope and faith which never quite died out in Slocum Price's indomitable breast.

"But you always have enough to eat, dear?" she questioned anxiously. Hannibal promptly reassured her on this point. "You wouldn't let me think anything that was not true, Hannibal—you are quite sure you have never been hungry?"

"Never, Miss Betty; honest!"

Betty gave a sigh of relief. She had been reproaching herself for her neglect of the child; she had meant to do so much for him and had done nothing! Now it was too late for her personally to interest herself in his behalf, yet before she left for the east she would provide for him. If she had felt it was possible to trust the judge she would have made him her agent, but even in his best aspect he seemed a dubious dependence. Tom, for quite different reasons, was equally out of the question. She thought of Mr. Mahaffy.

"What kind of a man is Mr. Mahaffy, Hannibal?"

"He's an awful nice man, Miss Betty, only he never lets on a body's got to find it out for his own self—he ain't like the judge."

"Does he—drink, too, Hannibal?" questioned Betty.

"Oh, yes; when he can get the licker, he does." It was evident that Hannibal was cheerfully tolerant of this weakness on the part of the austere Mahaffy. By this time Betty was ready to weep over the child, with his knowledge of shabby vice, and his fresh young faith in those old tatterdemalions.

"But, no matter what they do, they are very, very kind to you?" she continued tremulously.

"Yes, ma'am—why, Miss Betty, they're lovely men!"

"And do you ever hear the things spoken of you learned about at Mrs. Ferris' Sunday-school?"

"When the judge is drunk he talks a heap about 'em. It's beautiful to hear him then; you'd love it, Miss Betty," and Hannibal smiled up sweetly into her face.

"Does he have you go to Sunday-school in Raleigh?"

The boy shook his head.

"I ain't got no clothes that's fitten to wear, nor no pennies to give, but the judge, he 'lows that as soon as he can make a raise I got to go, and he's learning me my letters—but we ain't a book. Miss Betty, I reckon it'd stump you some to guess how he's fixed it for me to learn!"

"He's drawn the letters for you, is that the way?" In spite of herself, Betty was experiencing a certain revulsion of feeling where the judge and Mahaffy were concerned. They were doubtless bad enough, but they could have been worse.

"No, ma'am; he done soaked the label off one of Mr. Pegloe's whisky bottles and pasted it on the wall just as high as my chin, so's I can see it good, and he's learning me that-away! Maybe you've seen the kind of bottle I mean—Pegloe's Mississippi Pilot; Pure Corn Whisky?" But Hannibal's bright little face fell. He was quick to see that the educational system devised by the judge did not impress Betty at all favorably. She drew him into her arms.

"You shall have my books—the books I learned to read out of when I was a little girl, Hannibal!"

"I like learning from the label pretty well," said Hannibal loyally.

"But you'll like the books better, dear, when you see them. I know just where they are, for I happened on them on a shelf in the library only the other day."

After they had found and examined the books and Hannibal had grudgingly admitted that they might possess certain points of advantage over the label, he and Bety went out for a walk. It was now late afternoon and the sun was sinking behind the wall of the forest that rose along the Arkansas coast. Their steps had led them to the terrace—where they stood looking off into the west. It was here that Betty had said good-by to Bruce Carrington—it might have been months ago, and it was only days. She thought of Charley—Charley, with his youth and hope and high courage—unwittingly enough she had led him on to his death! A sob rose in her throat.

Hannibal looked up into her face. The memory of his own loss was never very long absent from his mind, and Miss Betty had been the victim of a similarly sinister tragedy.

"You Needn't Be Afraid, I Got Something Important to Say."

He recalled those first awful days of loneliness through which he had lived, when there was no Uncle Bob—soft-voiced, smiling and infinitely companionable.

"Why, Hannibal, you are crying—what about, dear?" asked Betty suddenly.

"No, ma'am; I ain't crying," said Hannibal stoutly, but his wet lashes gave the lie to his words.

"Are you homesick—do you wish to go back to the judge and Mr. Mahaffy?"

"No, ma'am—it ain't that—I was just thinking—"

"Thinking about what, dear?"

"About my Uncle Bob." The small face was very wistful.

"Oh—and you still miss him so much, Hannibal?"

"I bet I do—I reckon anybody who knew Uncle Bob would never get over missing him; they just couldn't, Miss Betty! The judge is mighty kind, and so is Mr. Mahaffy—they're mighty kind, Miss Betty, and it seems like they get kinder all the time, but Uncle Bob—"

"Deed I would! Does she leak any, Miss Betty?"

"I don't know about that. Do boats usually leak, Hannibal?"

"Why, you ain't ever been out rowing her, Miss Betty, have you?—and there ain't no better fun than rowing a boat!" They had started down the path.

"I used to think that, too, Hannibal; how do you suppose it is that when people grow up they forget all about the really nice things they might do?"

"What use is she if you don't go rowing in her?" persisted Hannibal.

"Oh, but it is used. Mr. Tom uses it in crossing to the other side where they are clearing land for cotton. It saves him a long walk or ride about the head of the bayou."

"Like I should like you out in her, Miss Betty!" demanded Hannibal with challenging anxiety.

They had reached the scattering timber, when Betty paused suddenly with a startled exclamation, and Hannibal felt her fingers close convulsively about his. The sound she had heard might have been only the rustling of the wind among the branches overhead in that shadowy silence, but Betty's nerves, the placid nerves of youth and perfect health, were shattered.

"Didn't you hear something, Hannibal?" she whispered fearfully.

For answer Hannibal pointed mysteriously, and glancing in the direction he indicated, Betty saw a woman advancing along the path toward them. The look of alarm slowly died out of his eyes.

"I think it's the overseer's niece," she told Hannibal, and they kept on toward the boat.

The girl came rapidly up the path, which closely followed the irregular line of the shore in its windings. Once she was seen to stop and glance back over her shoulder, her attitude intent and listening, then she hurried forward again. Just at the boat the three met.

"Good evening!" said Betty pleasantly.

The girl made no reply to this; she merely regarded Betty with a fixed stare. At length she broke the silence abruptly.

"I got something I want to say to you—you know who I am, I reckon?" She was a girl of about Betty's own age, with a certain dark, sullen beauty and that physical attraction which Tom, in spite of his vexed mood, had taken note of earlier in the day.

"You are Bess Hicks," said Betty.

"Make the boy go back toward the house a spell—I got something I want to say to you." Betty hesitated. She was offended by the girl's manner, which was as rude as her speech. "I ain't going to hurt you—you needn't be afraid of me. I got something important to say—send him off, I tell you; there ain't no time to lose!" The girl stamped her foot impatiently.

Betty made a sign to Hannibal and he passed slowly back along the path. He went unwillingly, and he kept his head turned that he might see what was done, even if he were not to hear what was said.

"That will do, Hannibal—wait there—don't go any farther!" Betty called after him when he had reached a point sufficiently distant to be out of hearing of a conversation carried on in an ordinary tone. "Now, what is it? Speak quickly if you have anything to tell me!"

"I got a heap to say," answered the girl with a scowl. Her manner was still fierce and repellant, and she gave Betty a certain jealous regard out of her black eyes which the latter was at a loss to explain. "Where's Mr. Tom?" she demanded.

"Tom? Why, about the place, I suppose—in his office, perhaps." So it had to do with Tom. . . . Betty felt sudden disgust with the situation.

"No, he ain't about the place, either! He done struck out for Memphis two hours after sun-up, and what's more, he ain't coming back here to-night—" There was a moment of silence. The girl looked about apprehensively. She continued, fixing her black eyes on Betty: "You're here alone at Belle Plain—you know what happened when Mr. Tom started for Memphis last time—I reckon you-all ain't forgot that!"

Betty felt a pallor steal over her face. She rested a hand that shook on the trunk of a tree to steady herself. The girl laughed shortly.

"Don't be so scared; I reckon Belle Plain's as good as his if anything happened to you?"

By a great effort Betty gained a measure of control over herself. She took a step nearer and looked the girl steadily in the face.

"Perhaps you will stop this sort of talk, and tell me what is going to happen to me—if you know?" she said quietly.

"Why do you reckon Mr. Norton was shot? I can tell you why—it was all along of you—that was why!" The girl's furtive glance, which searched and watched the gathering shadows, came back as it always did to Betty's pale face. "You ain't no safer than he was, I tell you!" and she sucked in her breath sharply between her full red lips.

"What do you mean?" faltered Betty.

"Do you reckon you're safe here in the big house alone? Why do you reckon Mr. Tom cleared out for Memphis? It was because he couldn't be around and have anything happen to you—that was why!" and the girl sank her voice to a whisper. "You quit Belle Plain now—to-night—just as soon as you can!"

"This is absurd—you are trying to frighten me!"

Hell Gate Still an Obstacle.

The work of eliminating Hell Gate in the New York harbor has been going on for many years. A great deal of rock has been removed and the channel deepened and widened so that there is now much shipping by this point, but there is yet room for improvement and a great movement has been started with the object of cutting down the powerful current rushing at present through this narrow body of water and at the same time making other improvements for the benefit of the shipping interests.

Flattery.

Two men, highly intoxicated, were walking home from their club, arm in arm, one night, when both tumbled simultaneously over some small obstruction on the sidewalk. One rolled to the right and landed in a gutter, while the other fell to the left and slid into a little trench that some workmen had been digging and left unprotected. For some moments after the fall dead silence reigned, and then the one on the left cried:

"I say, old chap, can't you give me a bit of a lift?"

Willing to Oblige.

A story comes from a town where firms advertise to sell fish direct to small purchasers. The glowing advertisements asked for the sending of half a dollar with a list of the varieties of fish preferred. One letter read:

"I want two salmon, a dozen whiting, a dozen fresh herring, some flounders, and if you have them you can add a lobster."

The next day the lady received a letter which ran:

"Dear Madam: Please send another dime and we will forward the fisherman."—Dallas News.

Her Unfortunate Error.

A literary lady at a society dinner was given a seat next to a noted scientist whose views were very materialistic, and at some remark he made on the origin of mankind, the lady found her temper tried beyond all bearing, so that she retorted: "I really don't care what you say. I believe in the Bible, and there we are told that Adam was the father of all living."

"I really think you are mistaken," he said with a smile, and so the subject dropped.

A few days later the lady, writing to a bosom friend, told her of the occurrence and added: "I am too mortified, for I have looked the matter up and it only says that Eve was the mother of all living, and so I don't know whether to write to the professor or not."

Little and Big Religion.

This story comes from Australia, where all conversation turns eventually to matters educational, because every parent is painfully anxious that his sons shall pass the standard which will free them from certain years of military service. A visitor was conversing with his host's small son, and opened, as a matter of course, with the words: "Do you go to school now?"

"Yes."

"And what do you learn? Reading, writing, sums?"

"Oh, yes, and I learn religion, too."

"Religion?"

"Yes, I learn the little religion, which teaches that we all come from Adam. But my elder brother is in a higher class; he learns the big religion, and that teaches that we all come from monkeys."—Manchester Guardian.

Matters of Especial Moment to the Progressive Agriculturist

To the hog an ear of corn in the pen is worth two in the bushel.

Jealousy is the weevil that eats the germ out of the grain of joy.

The pole of success is greased so that there is always room on top.

A political illiterate is just as bad—possibly even more so—as any other kind.

Money is the rich man's faith, the poor man's hope and the good man's charity.

A friend is a man who shows up quicker when we need him than when he needs us.

The land-boomer may not study his Bible very much, but he surely believes in paradise.

Do you think that the trusts will now disgorge, since they find that the farmer will not be George?

The idle dollar, like every other loafer, is out of place in the life-scheme of a practical man.

The farmer must be in love with his calling himself if he is to inspire his children to stay on the farm.

The best things in this life are free—joy, contentment, love. Deserve them, and they will come to you.

Helping one's fellow man to get a broader vision of life never yet lessened one's holdings in eternal life.

Of course you are not figuring on increasing your cotton acreage this year just because your neighbor has decided to reduce his.

The successful farmer is the one who listens to all the advice offered by his neighbors and then goes ahead and acts on his own judgment.

Many a farm boy who seeks his fortune in the city does not regret breaking home ties until he is counting the ties on the railroad on his way back.

IOWA SOCIETY PAYS DIVIDEND

The Rockwell farmers' co-operative association held their twenty-fourth annual meeting recently at Rockwell, City, Ia. This is one of the biggest, oldest and wealthiest societies of its kind in the world, and societies taking their by-laws have been organized in all parts of the world. Their report showed that they had done business aggregating $559,460 during the past 12 months, and this vast amount at an expense of only $5,540. No other institution in the country can make anything like a showing of this kind, writes Harry E. Stanbery in the Orange Judd Farmer. This year's business exceeded last year's by $135,084, and the institution is immensely wealthy. Dividend after dividend has been declared, and two years ago $50,000 was set aside as a surplus. Besides that, shares which originally cost but $10 are today worth $161. Standard Oil in its palmiest days never far outdistanced the Rockwell farmers' co-operative, and it was not organized for the purpose of making money in the way it is doing. It was organized so that its members would be able to get the very highest prices for their grain the market afforded, and this they have done. They also desired to buy coal and lumber at reasonable prices, and this they have been able to do. There are no more prosperous farmers in the state of Iowa than are those who have remained with their society in and around this little town.

The auditing committee showed assets to the amount of $54,737. The total liabilities for the year were $34,950, giving a net asset January 1, 1912, of $19,787. This report surely refutes the prediction made of this society 20 years ago: "Two years from now the grass will be growing on your driveways and the katydids and swallows will be building their nests in the cups of your elevators."

Farm Machinery.

The traction engine and the large plow will undoubtedly supersede the horse, and as a consequence costs of production will be cut down, profits will be smaller, and to those who continue with the old method the rents will increase. If the farmer can cooperate with his neighbor by pooling his land, purchasing machinery, and carrying on the work together, he is able to secure the benefits of larger capital, of better machinery, and of a constant supply of labor. It is true that there might be quarrelling, as there could be in any kind of co-operative enterprise, but there is no reason why men should not agree in the cultivation of the soil quite as much as in the sale of dry-goods, farming implements or other merchandise.

The sheep has been termed the plant scavenger of the farm. In fact, there are very few plants the sheep will not eat during some stage of its growth, and yet the cured fodder and grasses must be of the best quality to retain the best results in feeding operations.

HARD "GRIND" OF FARM LIFE

We hear the complaint that the great objection to farm life is its eternal "grind." But the writer has observed that the farmers that fail are frequently men that avoid doing much of this kind of grinding.

It is doubtful if there be more grinding in the farmer's life than in the life of many of the city business men, who work seven days a week and from 12 to 15 hours each day. Some of the successful business men have built up their fortunes by a slavery that is not surpassed by anything that occurs on the farms. In either case, it is the greatest sacrifice of such a life that gets results in the end and an old age of competence.

The grinding the farmer does is under the bright skies, with the pure air blowing about him. In the spring the zephyr fans his warm cheek and in the autumn the invigorating wind gives him new life. In the winter the germs are nailed down under the snow and the frigid air breathed by the farmer is pure. The city man works in a close office, often poorly ventilated, and during much of the daytime under artificial light. Multitudes of men work in city offices in which the gas or electric light is turned on at the time the men begin work in the morning, and is used till the last worker is gone at night. The rising or setting of the sun is never an event with them, for they never see it. Its rising and setting are hidden by lofty buildings that are always throwing a shadow on one side of them. The wind that sweeps through the building is always laden with dust and smoke. Several times a day the worker has to wash the dust from his hands. When the snow comes in the winter it does not protect him from the dust and germs of disease. Then the rooms are closer, and in those rooms the "grind" goes on. So much does this affect the health of the workers in the long run that it is a common saying that "were it not for the fresh blood being constantly supplied from the country, the cities would go to decay."

Then, too, the "grind" in country life is largely the fault of the farmer himself. A good many farmers are greedy of land and own and try to farm more land then they can comfortably handle. When a farmer settles down to the idea of farming only what land he needs he frequently finds that the necessity for grinding has dropped from him.

The "grind" of farm life is being lessened by intelligence. The agricultural colleges and experiment stations are constantly working in his interest and finding new ways of doing the things that need to be done.

In spite of the so-called "grind" of farm life we find that many farmers take time in the winter to go on long journeys for pleasure's sake.

The more a farmer thinks the less he is likely to grind, for the thinking saves his work. The putting in of the telephone has saved the farmer many needless journeys and by that much has reduced the "grind."

With the passing of the years and the increase of intelligence we may expect to see the "grind" of farm life greatly lessened.

Growing Tomatoes.

On rich garden soil, tomatoes are set 4 to 5 feet apart each way and 6 inches deep. In the north, where early frosts occur, it may be advisable to prune off a foot or more of the growing shoots in August to hasten maturity of the crop.

A light mulch of hay or straw is often put under the plants to keep the fruit off the ground.

Tomatoes should be trained to stakes or frames.

When stakes are used, one stake 6 feet high is used for each vine and the vine pruned to one to three stems. Many recommend pruning to a single stem. Pruning is said to increase the size of the fruit and the earliness of the crop.

Need of Records.

Many farmers do not know whether they are making or losing money. They have no idea where the profits or losses are coming from. One department may be losing money and another department making money. But how can the farmer know which is which unless he keeps books.

Many lawsuits and much unnecessary trouble are caused by farmers not keeping books. Accounts that were paid long before his death.

Keeping Beets Thinned Out.

Don't forget to thin the beets if you have not already done so. The plants should be three or more inches apart in order that each one may develop something like its normal size. Cook a few of the beet tops pulled out, and you will find them to be excellent greens.

Silage in Summer.

Every dairy farmer should have sufficient silo capacity to feed corn silage to all farm stock, and carry enough to carry the cows over the short pasture months.

Co-Operative Marketing.

Co-operative packing and marketing enable the fruit grower not only to secure better prices, but to produce a better product, as he can give his entire attention to growing fruit.

It Was a Ground Hog.

Two unsophisticated city youths on a Sunday outing were trudging up a hillside road, expecting to be pleased with scenery and amused by the natives. Just ahead of them two natives, young women, swung along with the free and easy stride of the practiced "hiker." The visitors and the natives were strangers.

"Ho, Ho, Haw!" came the answer from No. 2. "Don't you know a squirrel when you see it—that's a grey squirrel, m' boy."

Then both became conscious of suppressed giggling just in front, and in a staccato between giggles, one young woman informed the other who had not seen the little animal that was a ground hog.

Hardly the Sunday School Brand.

The young hopeful had secreted some bright buttons in his pocket, which came from the motor car show. When Sunday school was well under way, he took one out and pinned it on his coat, feeling it an ornament. Unfortunately, when the minister came round to speak to the dear children, his near sighted eyes were caught by the color.

"Well, Richard, I see you are wearing some motto, my lad. What does it say?"

"But I cannot see. I haven't my glasses, son. Read it so we can all hear you."

Her Special Advantages.

WILLING TO SHARE PENNIES

Generous Act of Street Waif That Gained Him a Friend in Great Novelist.

Charles Dickens, the creator of many delightful child characters, earned a million dollars during his lifetime with his pen, but often walked the streets of London in search of material for his books without a penny in his pocket.

One evening while doing this he was accosted by a small boy who asked him for a penny. Dickens searched his pockets, but they were empty, and so he told the boy, who was shivering in the cold.

Dickens stood back in the shadow of the street to see what the outcome would be. The lad continued to beg, and finally gained two pennies. He came dancing to Dickens with a jolly ring in his voice.

"Now," he said, "we'll have two hot buns apiece!"

Such a generous spirit under such trying circumstances struck Dickens so forcibly that he took the lad home with him, and there he was fed and clothed, and started on the road to a better life.

TERRIBLE ITCHING ON LIMBS

Glen Wilton, Va.—"Five years ago I was in a terrible state of suffering with blotches on my limbs, of the most intense stinging and itching. I could not rest day or night; the itching was so severe that it waked me out of sleep. I could never get a full night's rest. I actually scrubbed the very flesh so severely that in a short time the affected places were so sore I could scarcely walk with any ease or comfort. The places were a solid raised up mass. I would scratch the parts until they would bleed. I tried home remedies but got no good; the itching just kept on getting worse. I used some salve which simply was no good at all.

"I happened to see the Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertisement and wrote for a free sample. Almost like magic I commenced getting relief. I bought a 50c box of Cuticura Ointment and some Cuticura Soap and I was entirely cured from a torment that would be hard to describe." (Signed) W. P. Wood, Mar. 9, 1912

Quickly Penitent.

As a large black dog, Rover, was standing near the edge of the platform he was very much annoyed by the conduct of a small dog, which persisted in snapping at his legs, etc. Rover for a long time bore the indignities with seeming indifference, but at length, losing all patience, he turned upon his tormentor and, seizing him by the back of his neck, dropped him into the dock.

The struggles of the unfortunate animal were viewed with apparent interest by Rover, who, at last, seeing that the poor thing could hold out no longer, jumped into the water and swam with the small dog to a boat, in which they were both safely landed.

The incident excited much laughter amongst the fishing community, many of whom witnessed the occurrence.

Life of the Broker's Boy.

When the school days end in June, where is the boy who is not fired with the ambition to get rich by tackling a job for the vacation months? Many a one of these gets the notion that working for a stock broker or a bank is just what he wants. About the time he has devoted two weeks of vacation to his new aspiration, he wakes up to the fact that he has guessed wrong. He has been lured by tales of ease into a life of toil.

Instead of reporting for duty in the neighborhood of ten o'clock, these ambitious young financiers discover that they must be in the office promptly at 8:30 o'clock, and in some cases at eight. Also they must remain until five o'clock instead of leaving at 3 or 3:30, as they had been led to expect. Worse still, the pay is not what boasting acquaintances had led them to imagine it. At the end of two weeks or so, it is remarkable how many are ready to retire from business. The next vacation may find them ready for work again—but they are likely to be content to labor for the butcher, grocer, or baker.

COULD NOT DO IT JUSTICE

Case Where Words Failed Theatrical Star Who Had Just Right to Be Indignant.

When Henry Miller is rehearing a new play he works hard and long, remaining sometimes on the stage for twenty-four hours at a stretch. Naturally, such a strain makes him nervous and the combination of nervousness and artistic temperament occasionally produces an outburst, a flare-up, a blow-off. During the rehearsals for his last play, several things had gone wrong, and Miller had exhibited his impatience in gesture and words.

He went on with the work and was in the midst of a scene in which he had to pick up a teapot. As he did so, the handle came off, the pot fell to the table, and the tea—real tea—trickled down on the actor's legs. The stage manager immediately was seized by a trembling fit, and every member of the company began to wish for a cyclone cellar. They knew the star was about to cut loose.

But this last ill of fortune had been too much for him. Holding the handle in his hand and regarding the property man with sorrow, he said gently:

"Can't you fix this teapot? I've got to scrub the floors!"—Popular Magazine.

SEVEN YEARS OF MISERY

Sikeston, Mo. — "For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I had cramps, backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband's told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do all my own housework, work in the garden and entertain company and enjoy them, and can walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the week. I wish I could talk to every suffering woman and girl, and tell them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Remember, the remedy which did this was Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

It has helped thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing down feeling, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means have failed. Why don't you try it?

You Look Premature Old

MR. D. C. HUBBARD DEAD.

Mr. D. C. Hubbard died at his home in Jemison on the 6th inst. Next day his remains were carried to Macedonia cemetery and loving hands laid them away in their last resting place.

The funeral services were conducted by Mr. R. M. Honeycutt, in the presence of a vast concourse of people who gathered to pay their final tribute of respect to the deceased. Great numbers of his friends with love and tenderness looked for the last time at that familiar face resting in the casket, now wearing the signet of death. Mr. Hubbard spent his life in the section of the country where he died. His friends were many. He was a public-spirited man. He loved his country and his people. A man of kindness, generous and lovely.

He obtained salvation in 1885 and was baptized by Rev. A. E. Burns.

Mr. Hubbard was in his earlier life an ardent Sunday school worker. Oh! how well the writer remembers Mr. Hubbard's work in the Sunday school at Pleasant Grove in 1866. He was superintendent. It was the most successful school we ever saw. About 100 members were enrolled. Working there with Mr. Hubbard were Maroney, Patterson, Hodgens, Childers, Mrs. Patterson, Mrs. Hubbard, Miss Smitherman, Miss Love and others, several of whom are now in the realms of the dead. It was a happy year, never to be forgotten. But, alas! his work this side of the veil is done, and it might be said of him, in the language of Gertrude W. Scibert:

"And this poor, throbbing heart,
That cannot now unfold its love—
Beyond the veil,
Shall bloom and shine its fragrance through

"Happy thought, he is not gone forever, though death has for the present conquered him, it is only temporary, and He who conquered death and arose a victor over death and the grave, will in due time—at the proper time—restore Mr. Hubbard to life, and his loved ones ones will recognize him, then in the beautiful time to come which may not be far away, when there will be no more death, then in a real sunburst of love and light he may live through ages to come—forever with those he loved on this side of the grave, may sharing in the glorious work of helping to uplift all the willing ones of the human race, helping them to the water of life in that day when the Spirit and the Bride say come.

It is sad to part with him, but the sweet bow of hope spans the grave. Now his body rests near the happy home of his childhood by the side of his darling boy, who preceded him to the grave. To the bereaved family we tender our sympathy, yet we know our words are inadequate to bind up the bleeding heart when the silver cord is loosed. But, in the words of Erene E. Angleman, of New Jersey, we would point them to their unfailing friend:

"Certainly I will be with thee,
Child of my love, why fear?
Whate'er the path before thee,
I am forever near.

Certainly I will be with thee,
Calm thy soul be still.
My Love enfolds, surrounds thee,
And none may pass my will.

Certainly I will be with thee,
Child of my love, why fear?
In life, in death, in eternity,
I am forever near."

HIS LOVING FREND.

The differences between the eastern and western elevations in this country are curiously striking. Colorado has 40 peaks that are more than 14,000 feet about sea level. Mount Washington, in New Hampshire, and Mount Mitchell, in North Carolina, the highest peaks in the Appalachian system north and south, respectively, are considerable less than half as high as this above the ocean.

Most large cities lie low. Chicago is only about 600 feet above sea level, and Pittsburgh but 100 feet higher. Philadelphia ranges from sea level to a height in its suburbs of some 300 feet. Minneapolis, near the head of the Mississippi, has an elevation of less than 1,000 feet, and various parts of New Orleans at the mouth of the great river are recorded in the government tables as having elevations of from one to fifty feet. St. Louis lies about half way between these terminal cities.

CHANCES FOR THE STUDENT

We have student mechanics in all the large factories and student miners in all the great mines. There are student trainmen on all the trains and student superintendents in all the offices.

Soon we shall have student senators in the senate and student representatives in the house. A student judge will sit on every bench and student attorneys will assist every lawyer.

Student social learners will attend every function and student soldiers will accompany the troops. The White House will have to be enlarged to make room for about 1,000,000 student presidents, for nearly every mother in the United States will want to send her son to the White House to learn how to be president.

It might be interesting to know just what a student lover's privilege would be, but there is no doubt that a few lessons are sadly needed by some young persons.

CALOMEL GIVES ONLY TEMPORAR RELIEF.

Nearly everybody who has ever tried calomel for constipation or a sluggish liver has found that it gives only a temporary relief. For calomel is such a powerful drug that it shocks and weakens the liver and makes it less able afterward to do its duty than in the firs place.

This is one of the reasons why The Upchurch Drug Co. would rather sell Alred Drug Company would rather sell Dodson's Liver-Tone to you than calomel. We know that Dodson's Liver-Tone is a pure vegetable liver tonic that will cure constipation quickly and gently without any danger of bad after-effects. We guarantee it to do this with a guarantee that is simple and fair. If you buy a bottle of Dodson's Liver-Tone for yourself or your children, and do not find that it is a perfect substitute for calomel, then come back to the store and get your money. If you don't get value for your money out of this tonic, it's your right to expect your money back, and we will gladly give it to you.

PUTS BLAME ON PUBLISHERS

Scholar Points Out How They Are Responsible for Literature In "Cold Storage."

Publishers complain that people do not buy serious books. An experienced scholar retorts that publishers will not let them. Here is a new and rather important historical work of six hundred pages. It is printed in large type on heavy paper, with wide margins, to make is as bulky as possible. The price is $5, "postage extra." This is considerable money; but there are some eight hundred public and collegiate libraries that feel bound to buy any new historical work which can claim importance, no matter what the price.

The publisher would rather have the sure thing of eight hundred copies at $5 than take the chance of selling several thousand copies at $2. Theoretically, books in the library circulate; but it is notorious that people seldom go to a library for a new serious book. A reader whose habits or tastes would attract him to a new biography, say, wants the volumes on his shelves. If it is really worth the trouble of reading he will almost certainly wish to refer to it again. He cannot trot down to the library for every reference. A reader of such habits or tastes wishes to possess the books in which he is really interested. If he cannot afford to own the book he probably will not read it at all. What circulates from the library, besides fiction, is Taine's English Literature, Macaulay's England, Gibbon's Decline and Fall, Boswell's Johnson.

It is clear consequently that a large part of our new serious literature is automatically canned and moved into cold storage, and so there is a world of pains and expense for nothing!—Saturday Evening Post.

Deadly Glasses.

A contrast to the Venetian glasses which were popularly supposed to fly to pieces if poisoned liquor were poured into them, were glasses which poisoned all who drank from them. The poison was crystallized at the bottom of the glass, from which it was indistinguishable, and as it dissolved very slowly it could be used many times with deadly effect. Some such glasses can be seen at the British museum.

Unwelcome Caller.

Two cows were being driven along Causewayend, Aberdeen, Scotland, one recent forenoon, when they ran into a house on Charles street. Before the animals could be ejected, they smashed a quantity of furniture, and one of them put a foot through the floor. The mistress of the house, who was in at the time, suffered a severe shock from the unexpected intrusion on the domestic circle.

FALKTO.

Editor Union Banner.—Will try and give you the news from this neck of the woods.

Health here is fairly good at the present.

Crops are looking some better since rain began. They are very sorry for the time of year. People will soon be done work in their crops around here for awhile.

Mr. Perkins of Birmingham was the guest of Miss Virgie Minor, Sunday, all the girls seemed to think he was awful "cute" or something attracted their attention awfully. Now boys I see if we want a sweet-heart the thing for us to do is to go to Birmingham and stay awhile then we will be good looking too. Most especially if they have any idea of getting to go back with us.

Wedding bells have been ringing recently but don't think there was any cake.

Watermellon time is here and protracted meeting also and everybody is expecting a good time.

The ball game at this place was fine the 4th.

Noticed a piece in last weeks issue of this paper where some one wanted "Old Times" again now, we will admit that "'old times" were alright when everybody knew everybody and sat around the fire and eat ash-cake together, but this is all gone now and so many superior things have taken their place. Tho' I don't think they are anything to compare with our "new times." Look we have gone from the tallow dip to the electric light, from the ox cart to the railways of various different kinds. From the post boy to the telephone. Steam has been harnessed for our convenience, and lightning chained for our comfort. The variety and extent of food has been enlarged, posion has been changed into balm and medicine. The clutch of disease has been loosened. Death has been robbed of much of its terrors. The jungles of ignorance are being cleard up. All this and more has science done within the memory of the man of two score years and ten. Lots of people declare that the banishment of ignorance has brought evil, and second the universal education has been a curse. The very statement of such conclusions is their contradiction, they too say the more we know the worse we behave, that is not true, are the penitentiaries filled with college graduates? Are the county jails filled with boys and girls from the high schools? Surely you will smile and say no. If ignorance is bliss then among all animals the hog is the most to be envied. If education don't build up humanity the millions expended for schools and teaching should be dumped down in the sea, of course our fathers and mothers never had one-fortieth the chance we have now in the "good new" times. Think even of the elections of olden times then of those of today. In "olden times" we had no elections by the people and no people only a king and his subjects. There are no more absolute Monarchies in the civilized world. Even the Czar's form of government in Russia the nearest approach to absolute monarchy is tempered by assinations. The good new times have brought political freedom in larger or less degree, everywhere, Chattle slavery has been abolished, man's slanting head has been lifted and he has been made to look the whole world in the face, now if he carries the hoe in one hand he is allowed a ballot in the other nowdays the doors of every country swing open, the sunlight of truth comes in and every man has a chance and this seems superior to 'old times". There are hundreds of other things we might write but space won't permit. Let everybody cheer up and write to the Union Banner and enjoy the "good new times" I am still.

LEAPS FROM TRAIN.

Henry East, a notorious white criminal who was serving eighteen months for burglary, committed at Florence, escaped from a Louisville and Nashville train at Cooper, while in charge of the state agent, en route to the state penetentiary from the coal mines. The train was moving at a rapid rate of speed. Three months ago East jumped from a moving train while being taken from Birmingham to Wetumpka, but was recaptured. Bloodhounds are on his trail. A reward of $50 has been offered for his capture.

THORSBY.

Pastor Grosper, wife and little son leave Wednesday morning for a trip to their old home in Kentucky. We wish them a good rest and pray our pastor will return after a month's vacation much improved in health.

The ETAOIN IN NNN

The band boys went to Crossroads Saturday to play for Children's day. The band boys are always in demand.

Rev. Butler's family have gone to Shelby Springs to spend the hot season. We wish them much pleasure and better health.

Mr. W. B. Tomlin, one of our good men, will make a business trip to Birmingham this week.

Professor Herbert has just returned from Joppa where he has been the past week packing their household goods. Professor Herbert will be the principal of the institute the coming year. We are glad to have another good family added to our list.

Mr. Nicholson reports a fine trip to Chicago during the great and exciting days of the convention.

Miss Martha Brinkley, who has been through a siege of the fever, left Monday morning for her home to spend the rest of the vacation season. We hope to see her return in the autumn strong and ready for her school work.

Mr. Sereno Norton and son, have their place of business running, making pop nuts. Thorsby friends wish them success.

The Swedish ladies' aid were entertained last Thursday at the home of Mrs. J. L. Goss, a big crowd attended. A good collection was the result. The refreshments were fine.

On July the 4th, Thorsby spent one of the most delightful public affairs in its history, for which we are indebted to the band boys under the leadership of Mr. Clarence Bice. The day opened with music, baseball games, a picnic dinner and in the evening excellent fireworks. The day closed with a dance which was much enjoyed by the young people. The day of recreation was spent on the institute grounds. The Clanton and Jemison people were with us as well as other surrounding counties. Everything passed off quietly. All kinds of refreshing drinks and ice cream were furnished on the grounds. Our worthy mayor wanted perfect order throughout the day and succeeded in maintaining it. Much praise is due him. We also thank the band for affording us such a delightful day of pleasure. All we can say is do so some more.

Here's a question. Thorsby wants a dry town. Why can't we have it. When our most excellent mayor is a temperance man and is doing his best to make Thorsby a temperance town. Why is it when the wives and mothers are praying for it, that the courts of Clanton fight it. The writer was more than disgusted while attending the last term of court to hear the verdicts brought in by the jury. For instance, a man was tried for selling or giving away liquor, There was never stronger evidence brought to show by all witnesses examined in the case that the man was guilty, yet the jury brought in a verdict to the contrary.

What's the matter? It is plain to be seen that twelve men should be chosen on the jury who do not like it themselves instead of twelve who do, and very soon we would see a change in affairs. All of the wine that has been stored for years in the old winery in Thorsby was destroyed a few weeks ago by the marshall of our town under the direction of our mayor. Many thanks to him, less intemperance has been seen here since. We sincerely ask all good people in surrounding towns to help us keep intoxicating drinks from our boys.

JACKSON'S CHAPEL.

Prof. Lonnie Parrish began his school Monday, with a large attendance, although we are expecting a larger crowd. I think we have a fine teacher, whom we all love. He strives to do his duty and if we but try we will surely succeed.

There will be singing at Jackson's chapel Sunday afternoon in the new books (Revival Glory). Everybody come and bring books. There will also be preaching at this place on the first Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night in August.

MT. PLEASANT.

Among the visitors at the singing Suday evening, were Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Morris, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Littlejohn, Messrs. R. C. Riggins, E. F. Taylor and J. M. Littlejohn.

Mr. and Mrs. D. D. Melton spent Saturday night at Rev. W. P. Lowery's.

Miss Eula Foshee of Liberty Hill visited our Sunday school last Sunday.

Mrs. Martha Moore is visiting her son-in-law, J. P. Thomas.

Our newly elected trustees for this district are G. W. Melton, W. H. Foshee and T. S. Parker.

Mr. Hugh Davenport and wife of Mulberry visited friends and relatives here Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Beulah Vance spent Sunday with Miss Eula Belle Foshee.

Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Mullins were callers at Lee Vickers last Sunday evening.

ENTERPRISE.

Health here is good except Mr. Sorrell and Mrs. D. T. Melton, she has been very sick the past week. Mr. Sorrell, who has had a case of fever is improving.

Mr. Luther Davis left last Monday for Montgomery, where he will take a business course.

Mr. T. G. Robinson and wife visited his parents the latter part of last week, Mr. M. P. Robinson of Jemison.

Sunday School at Prospect Sunday was very good. The singing at Bethany Sunday afternoon was fine.

There will be a series of meetings beginning at Prospect next Sunday. We are expecting a grand revival of religion. At the close of the Methodist meeting a protracted meeting will be started at Bethany.

Owing to so much rain, the farmers are getting behind with their work. Most of them have laid their corn by.

Several of the young people of this place went to Evergreen Sunday night and had a very good time. Some of our young people went to Mountain Creek Wednesday and report a nice time.

MARS HILL.

There will be an all day singing with ice cream and lemonade at this place Saturday, July 20th. New books used. Everybody invited to come and bring books and well-filled baskets.

Just a word of warning to the whiskey drinkers. You would better leave your liquor at home on that day, for I was at singing there Sunday afternoon and they have plans laid and you'd better watch, They say they won't have any drinking around the church. We are going to expect all to be sober that day, and if any drunk ones come, look out, you may get a special invitation to Clanton. We are not writing this to offend anyone, but we are expecting a good time regardless of the drunkards.

Come one, come all!

JEMISON.

To Union Readers. Greetings:

We just closed our third children's day services on July 4th. The program at Shiloh Church was rendered on the fourth Sunday in June, with a large audience and remarkable interest. The program was well rendered, using the program furnished by our educational board and conducted by our Sunday School Superintendent, Bro. Richard Busby, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Chester Busby. The writer conducted the devotional exercises. The collection was very good.

Our children's day services were held at Oak Hill Church the 4th Sunday in June. Using the program furnished by the Board, our beloved Sunday School Superintendent, C. L. Glasscock, conducted the services with the assistance of the Pastor. Collection good. Our children's day program was rendered at Mount Pleasant Church on the 4th of July, conducted by Supt. Walter Martin.

We believe the ambition of the children was raised to higher ideals, especially after hearing a a remarkable speech on Higher Ideals of Life by Prof. Howard Roper, a brilliant young teacher of our county. Also after two remarkable temperance speeches delivered by Mrs. Pearl Glass and Mrs. Nuna Laird, and two remarkable orations written and spoken by Miss Laura Robinson, a student from our Industrial School, Boaz, Ala.

My Brother Pastors of Chilton County, let us observe Children's Day and tell the young people about our Church Schools and insist on a religious education. I believe this to be the only hope of our great nation. The Apostle Paul said, "Study to show thyself approved." My dear friends and readers of the Union-Banner it is my purpose and ambition to attend school two more years. I ask all the good people of Chilton County to pray for me that I may have sufficient means to get thru school two more years and to look after a wife and five children during the time.

Just a word as to our leaders in music for Children's Day. We had with us Prof. Taylor and sister, Profs. Wood, Arch Glasscock and Miss Carrie Dorminy, a brilliant young lady, a good musician and remarkable singer. The music was fine. I don't believe it could have been beat in

BOLL WEEVIL COMPLAINTS

STATE ENTOMOLOGIST HINDS DISCUSSES CONDITIONS IN THE STATE.

ARMY WORM IS PRESENT

Use of Arsenate of Lead, Only Insecticide for Cotton, Advised.

Auburn.—Dr. W. E. Hinds, Entomologist, Alabama Experiment Station, at Auburn, issued the following statement concerning cotton insects:

"In many sections of the State complaint is being made of extensive shedding of cotton forms. These show the work in some cases of the cotton boll worm. Usually this species confines its attack to corn during the early part of the season, being known on corn either as the bud worm, when it works on the plant before the tassel appears, or as the roasting ear worm, while the ears are developing. The attack on cotton usually occurs from the third generation of worms at the time that corn begins to harden and may be checked to a considerable extent by either spraying or dusting the cotton at that time with arsenate of lead, as advised for the cotton leaf worm.

"In addition to the boll worm the grass worm, or army worm, is attacking cotton in many fields. In young cotton they have a tendency to cut off the plants quite near the ground without debarring much of the foliage. It would appear that they are not especially fond of cotton, but will take to it when other sources of food become exhausted. In this case it is probable that only a spray of arsenate of lead, two pounds, lime, two pounds, to fifty gallons, applied so as to reach the stem as well as the leaves, would be likely to check the worm. Frequently and shallow cultivations, reaching as nearly as possible to the basis of the plants will help to check the grass worm injury on any cultivated crop.

"Arsenate of lead is the only insecticide that we advise for use on young cotton because it does not check the fruiting and adheres to the plant for a long time, thus giving continued protection. Paris green, while good as an insecticide for many pests, should not be used on cotton in its present stage of development especially since it is very likely to check the fruiting even where burning is not apparent.

"The grass worm is continuing its multiplications and damaging especially corn. Many planters have an idea that these worms will not injure corn after it becomes nearly mature. This idea is mistaken. Corn is especially in danger just at the time that the ears are forming wherever a generation of the worms is becoming grown at that time. The worms bore into the tips of the ears and cut the silk before the kernels set, thus causing largely sterile ears. Even if the grain sets a number of worms may bore into the ear and destroy it. In many cases examined where the ears appear to be normal an examination has shown that there is little grain and the crop is practically wholly destroyed. In such cases it is advisable to immediately cut and shock the green stalks, saving them for forage. This becomes especially important since there is likely to be difficulty in producing other forage crops where the worms are abundant. The cost of poisoning an acre of corn may be about 75 cents for labor and materials for each treatment and one man with a knapsack pump should be able to treat from five to seven acres a day if the spray material is conveniently at hand.

"More complaint of genuine boll weevil injury is being received than has ever come before from Alabama planters. The localities reporting weevils show that the weevils lost little, if any, ground on account of the exceptionally wet winter of 1911-12. There is every indication at present that the boll weevil may be expected to advance through its normal distance during the coming fall."

Scully Names Officers.

Montgomery.—Officers of the first regiment of the Alabama National Guard have been appointed and commissioned by Adjutant-General J. B. Scully as follows: H. S. Stallings of Troy, assistant surgeon; C. K. Knox of Troy, captain and adjutant; Abner R. Chapman of Geneva, assistant surgeon.

Mallory Pension Examiner.

Montgomery.—B. M. Mallery of Sulligent will be pension examiner of Lamar county. He was appointed by Governor O'Neal Monday to succeed H. W. Miller of Millport, whose term has expired.

Taxable Property Shows Increase.

Montgomery.—Montgomery county's taxable property valuation for 1912 is $32,486,753, or $626,074 more than last year, according to figures compiled by Chief Clerk David W. Crorland in the county tax collector's office. Because of the reduction of two mills in the tax for the road and bridge fund $7,492.34 less will be collected this year than in 1912. The total state and county taxes for 1913 will be $438,573.16, while taxes for last year reached $446,065.50.

WHITE ELECTED PRESIDENT

Montgomery.—Inethical practices of Jefferson county attorneys were criticised, the fee system as operated in Jefferson county was scored and W. W. Callahan of Decatur pitted himself against Gov. Emmet O'Neal in a discussion of needed reforms in the judicial system at the closing session of the Alabama State Bar association at Jackson's Lake.

Capt. Frank White of Birmingham was elected president of the association and five vice presidents were selected. The election of White is regarded as a victory for the conservatives headed by Governor O'Neal. The progressives nominated W. C. Fitts of Birmingham for the office while White's name was presented by Governor O'Neal. Captain White received 84 votes while 40 members favored Fitts.

Criticism of Birmingham attorneys was made by a special committee appointed at the last meeting. The report was received and held and was not read at the convention. Governor O'Neal attacked practices of sheriffs especially the official in Jefferson county, for appointing deputies to protect property of private corporations. He charged that if deuties were to be paid by corporations they would serve the companies rather than the state. The governor also recommended immediate reform in the system of judicial procedure. The executive's recommendation that the number of judges be reduced brought forth Mr. Callahan's criticism.

The Decatur man declared that there was more euphony and diction than logical conclusions in the governor's paper. He said he did not think the present judicial system was antiquated and opposed practically all policies of Governor O'Neal.

White E. Gibson took issue with Governor O'Neal about the needed decrease in judges. He said that there were not enough judges in Jefferson county. He came out for the recall, and said that "the time is coming when we are going to have the recall. The man who has just delivered this address recalled a tax commissioner and if one man has the right to recall, the people certainly have it too." Mr. Gibson referred to Governor O'Neal's dismissal of Peyton G. Bowman as tax commissioner of Jefferson county.

The five presidents elected by the association are: Virgil Bouldin, Scottsboro; W. W. Pearson, Montgomery; J. K. Dixon, Talladega; W. S. Pitts, Uniontown, and W. E. Gibson, Birmingham. Alexander Troy was unanimously re-elected secretary and treasurer, and members of the executive committee and central council were re-elected by acclamation. Members are: Executive committee, W. T. Seibels, R. G. Arrington, Leon Weil, Leon McCord, Alexander Troy, Montgomery.

Central committee, H. A. Sims, Henry Fitts, Z. T. Rudulph, Forney Johnston, Sterling A. Wood, Birmingham. The executive committee will select the place for the next meeting.

VIOLATING STATE LAW.

Foreign Corporations Must Pay Fines Amounting to $3,050.

Montgomery.—Ten foreign corporations must pay fines of $3,050 for violating the state law which regulates the business of out-of-state companies. The fines were assessed by the state board of compromise. The corporations are Huskins Brothers Company of Cedar Falls, Iowa, with headquarters at Birmingham, $500; A. Sander Packing Company of Ohio, doing business in Birmingham, $500; Independent Oil and Fertilizer Works of Mississippi, doing business at Reform, $250; Lookout Fuel Company of New York, with branch at Mentone, $150; Turner-Day-Woolworth Handle company, headquarters at Decatur, $100; Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Ohio, state headquarters at Birmingham, $1,000; American Tire and Timber Company of Brunswick, Ga., Alabama headquarters at Mobile, $250; Indian Refining Company of New York, with branches at Birmingham and Anniston, $100; Stantonville Telephone Company, doing business in North Alabama and Mississippi, $100; Gulf States Land Company, Alabama headquarters in Butler county, $100.

Imports Have Increased.

Mobile.—Valuation imports at the port of Mobile for the month of June reached a total of $476,828. This is an increase over the same month last year. Mexico took the lead with imports valued at $131,000, while Honduras was next with $121,913.

New Sawmill Planned.

Montgomery.—Powers Brothers and Howell, Moundville, Ala., have purchased 500 acres of timber land and will build a sawmill with a daily capacity of 25,000 feet of lumber.

Florence.—Quite a discovery was made recently while sinking a well at the Pratt Bottling works. At a depth of 121 feet the drill struck a large flow of water, supposed to have strong medicinal properties. The drill went through 75 feet of dirt and then 67 feet of solid rock. In this rock was found a fissure through which sulphur water flows at the rate of between 1,500 and 1,600 gallons daily. It is said to possess the same virtues as the famous Red boiling springs in Tennessee. The water has been sent to Auburn for an analysis.

ALABAMA JOTTINGS

Montgomery.—Harry Brannon must serve six months' hard labor for Barbour county for violating the prohibition laws. Governor O'Neal has refused to grant a parole.

Eufaula.—The Barbour county soldiers reunion and the annual sacred harp singing will be held at Clayton Friday, July 26. The Confederate veterans will be entertained at dinner.

Montgomery.—Capt. John C. Cheney, chief clerk of the state department of agriculture, represented Alabama at the annual meeting of the National Fertilizer Association, at Atlantic City, New Jersey.

Gadsden.—Negro teachers of St. Clair, Marshall, Cherokee, DeKalb and Etowah county will meet here July 29 to attend an institute which has been arranged for them by the state board of education and Superintendent of Education J. E. Williams, of this county.

Montgomery.— Frank Richardson, condemned to death for the murder of two men in Tuscaloosa county, is pleading with Governor O'Neal to commute the sentence to life imprisonment. Richardson will be hanged at Tuscaloosa July 19 unless the governor interferes, and it is improbable that the sentence will be continued.

Montgomery.—This year Alabama will raise the biggest crop of corn in its history, unless weather and worms destroy it. The United States bureau of agriculture has found that the state has planted 3,120,000 acres, which is 104 per cent. The government does not find the condition of the crop on July 1 was so good as it was at the same period last year, condition this year being 82, while last year it was 86.

Montgomery.—Governor O'Neal has turned a deaf ear to S. H. Bailey's petition for a parole from the penitentiary. The governor held that the convict's illness is not critical and that he would not be justified in granting release from the prison because Bailey was suffering with an incurable disease. Bailey was convicted of the murder of Lee Allen in Lee county, and was given a life sentence in the penitentiary.

Huntsville.—The city commissioners entered into a five-year contract with the Huntsville Railway, Light and Power Company for the lighting of the streets. The Alabama Power Development Company has taken a 90-day option on the plant and franchises of the Huntsville Railway, Light and Power Company and will in all probability assume charge in a short time. A new franchise will be granted by the commissioners and it will extend for 30 years.

Opelika.—The Fourth District Sunday school convention will be held at Union Grove church, July 21. This district comprises the Sunday schools of the First Baptist, Opelika; Trinity Methodist, Opelika; First Methodist, Opelika; Carmel Baptist, Opelika; Watoola, Pearce's chapel, Union Grove. Among the speakers will be R. D. Webb, county president; the Rev. M. P. Edwards, T. J. Hutchison, L. Rutledge, Miss Mollie Smith and Miss Lillian Cooper.

Auburn.—The college authorities of the Alabama Polytechnic institute announce the final completion of arrangements and conditions under which the Southern railway, in conjunction with other lines, have established two free scholarships. The Southern railway, the Alabama Great Southern railway, and the Northern Alabama railway have jointly established a free scholarship to be awarded to young men from a county traversed by their lines. The counties traversed by the above mentioned railways, residents of which are eligible for this scholarship, are as follows: Colbert, Lawrence, Morgan, Limestone, Madison, Jackson, Franklin, Marion, Winston, Walker, Fayette, Lamar, Jefferson, St. Clair, Etowah, DeKalb, Cherokee, Calhoun, Cleburne, Talladega, Shelby, Hale, Greene, Sumter, Tuscaloosa.

The second scholarship is the gift of the Southern railway jointly with the Mobile and Ohio railroad. The counties which these railroads traverse, and from which the applicants for the second scholarship are to be selected, are as follows: Pickens, Bibb, Chilton, Autauga, Montgomery, Dallas, Perry, Marengo, Wilcox, Clarke, Washington and Mobile.

The scholarships are established to promote interest in scientific agricultural education, and are for the benefit of deserving young men who wish to prepare themselves for this profession.

Eufaula.—Eufaula is rapidly becoming a railroad center under the experiment which has been tried for the past year by the Central of Georiag, which is managing its traffic between Montgomery and Macon from this city. As a result, the amount of equipment being held here may necessitate the building of a round house and shops. Within the past twelve months the pay roll here has increased 400 per cent, making the railroad the largest wage dispenser in the city, while vacant houses are rapidly being taken up by incoming families.

BAILEY ROASTS CHIEF EXECUTIVE

PRESIDENT IS REBUKED FOR INTERFERENCE WITH THE SENATE.

DEMOCRATS ARE UNANIMOUS

Washington.—The Senate indirectly rebuked President Taft for his course in connection with the Lorimer case. Once blocked from a vote by the Archbald impeachment proceedings, a resolution battle-scarred in a protracted, bitter debate, finally was adopted 35 to 23, denouncing "any attempt on the part of a president" to exercise the power of his office to influence a vote on questions within the Senate's exclusive jurisdiction. The resolution originally was framed by Senator aBiley who had arraigned President Taft, asserting he had been "officious and meddlesome" in endeavoring to line up regular republican senators in the Lorimer case.

The resolution, as adopted, read:

"Resolved, that any attempt on the part of a President of the United States to exercise the powers and influence of his great office for the purpose of controlling the vote of any senator upon a question involving a right to a seat in the Senate, or upon any other matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Senate, would violate the spirit if not the letter of the constitution and the rights of the Senate."

Not a democrat voted against the resolution, but six republicans voted for it. Republicans who voted for it were Senators Bourne, Clapp, Fall, Gallinger, McCumber and Works. Democrats who voted for the resolution were; Ashurst, Beacon, Bailey, Bryan, Chamberlain, Culberson, Fletcher, Gardner, Hitchcock, Johnson, Johnston, Martin, Martine, Newlands, O'Gorman, Overman, Percy, Reed, Shively, Simmons, Smith, of Arizona, Smith, of Georgia, Smith, of Maryland, Smith, of South Carolina, Stone, Swanson, Thornton and Tillman.

Those republicans who voted against the resolution were: Borah, Brandege, Bristow, Burnham, Burton, Catron, Crawford, Cummins, Dupont, Gronga, Jones, Kenyon, Massey, McLean, Nelson, Oliver, Page, Perkins, Root, Smith of Michigan, Smoot, Sutherland and Townsend.

Senator Bailey, who introduced the resolution, does not approve of the course of President Taft as described in a letter the President wrote to Colonel Roosevelt January 6, 1910, which the President made public in a recent speech during the Massachusetts primary. The original Bailey resolution was directed at presidential influence on votes upon the right of senators to retain their seats. When Senator Bailey concluded he accepted an amendment offered by Senator McCumber, striking out words of condemnation from the resolution and extending it to other matters within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Senate. He also accepted an amendment by Senator Hayburn to insert the word "would."

SMITH JOINS THIRD PARTY.

Tenders His Resignation to President Taft.

Washington.—Herbert Knox Smith resigned as commissioner of corporations to join the forces the Theodore Roosevelt and the new prgressive party. He will be succeeded in all probability by Luther Conant, Jr., of Brooklyn, N. Y., the present deputy commissioner of corporations, who is desired as a distinctly administration exponent. The change became effective on the close of business July 18.

He will probably take an active part in the campaign, discussing corporations with referrence to the Sherman anti-trust law. He admitted that he advised the former President of his action, and tentatively discussed the future at his conference with Mr. Roosevelt at Oyster Bay, which gave rise to rumors that he would withdraw his allegiance to President Taft.

SPARKS FROM THE WIRES.

Washington.—Representative Victor F. Berger of Wiscinsin, Socialist, was given permission to address the House one hour on the political situation.

New York.—Mrs. Linda Lee Thomas was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce from Edward R. Thomas, the former banker and sportsman, by the supreme court here.

St. Louis.—Contracts aggregating $500,000 to repair breaks in levees on the lower Mississippi river caused by the recent floods were let by the Mississippi river commission in St. Louis.

Norfolk, Va.—Several firemen from the navy collier Vulcan now at anchor in Hampton Roads, complained of ill treatment when they protested against the food furnished them. They claim they were forced to drink hot water or pay fifteen cents a bottle for beer.

WILLIAM M'COMBS TO LEAD CAMPAIGN

ELECTED CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE.

HELPERS TO BE APPOINTED

Davies Elected Secretary to Succeed Woodson, and Martin Again Chos Sergeant-at-Arms.

Chicago.—William F. McCombs, of New York, Governor Woodrow Wilson's choice, was elected chairman of the democratic national committee and was empowered to appoint a committee of not fewer than nine members to take active charge of the democratic presidential nominee's campaign.

Mr. McCombs also was authorized to select a national treasurer and such other officers as he may see fit, including possibly a vice chairman, and after consulting with Governor Wilson to select a place for headquarters. Mr. McCombs said he thought headquarters would be in New York, "but I am not going to appoint anybody or select any place until I confer with Governor Wilson," he added.

Joseph E. Davies of Madison, Wis., was elected secretary of the committee to succeed Urey Woodson of Kentucky. John I. Martin of St. Louis was re-elected sergeant-at-arms.

Mr. McCombs' selection and the plan to appoint a campaign committee of nine, the majority of whom are to be members of the national committee, with Mr. McCombs as chairman of the sub-committee were ordered on resolutions offered by Committeeman Robert S. Hudspeth of New York as representing the wishes of Governor Wilson.

In presenting Mr. McCombs' name, Mr. Hudspeth said:

"His intelligent and sagacious handling of Mr. Wilson's campaign in the last year and a half has demonstrated his wonderful fitness for leadership and shown him to be amply equipped to carry the democratic party to victory."

The vote for the selection was unanimous and Norman E. Mack, retiring chairman, yielded the gavel to Mr. McCombs.

"I cannot hope to achieve success unless I have the entire support of this committee which I believe I have," said Mr. McCombs. "I urge al of you during the campaign to consult with me freely."

CITY OF DENVER FLOODED.

Two Dead, Five Injured and Twelve Missing.

Denver, Col.—Two dead, five injured, 12 missing and property damage at least $2,000,000 is the net result of the flood that visited here.

Accurate figures on property damages still are incomplete but eselmates run as high as $5,000,000. Practically the entire wholesale and factory districts were flooded.

Mayor Henry J. Arnold estimates the total damage of flood here at $4,000,000. He itemized his statement as follows:

Damage to city property, including sewers, parking, bridges, street surfacing and city shops, $500,000.

Damage to private property, including warehouses, $500,000.

Damage to personal property, $1,000,000.

Damage to crops and irrigation projects in vicinity of Denver $2,000,000.

It is estimated 3,000 people were made homeless. A dozen people reported missing are yet to be accounted for.

With about 15,000 men repairing damage, an army of city employes and individuals clearing away the wreckage of buildings and bridges; rescuers still searching the banks of Cherry creek for further possible victims and the city fire department aiding in pumping out flooded basements in the downtown wholesale districts, Denver is rapidly assuming normal conditions.

The flood is without parallel in the history of the city. Had it not been for warnings sounded over the telephone many could not have escaped death. Many fled in their night clothes.

The crest of the cloudburst was preceded by a storm with a wind velocity of 48 miles and hour.

WIRE FLASHES.

Seattle, Wash.—At a conference of Roosevelt republicans of Washington held in Seattle resolutions were adopted denouncing the nomination of President Taft.

Rorschach, Switzerland.—Eleven persons were drowned most of them young girls, by the capsizing of two row boats in a storm on Lake Constance.

Washington.—A unique conscience contribution was received by the treasury department from an unknown citizen of St. Louis, who sent 10 $1 postage stamps in restitution for some fraudulent act or oversight. The stamps were converted into cash and deposited in the general fund of the treasury.

'Twas a Pretty Thing.

The young man produced a small, square box from his pocket.

"I have a present for you," he began. "I don't know whether it will fit your finger or not, but——"

"Oh, George!" she broke in, "this is so sudden! Why, I never dreamed——"

But just then George produced the gift—a silver thimble—and it got suddenly cooler in the room.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Popular French Coins.

Writing from Paris, Victor Auburtin says of the New French coins that for hygienic reasons and to reduce the weight the old coppers will soon be replaced in the circulating currency by little nickel pieces, some of which will have holes. No one will deny, he says, that the copper pieces are unclean and that they may be the means of spreading disease, but still the French people will part with them reluctantly. The pieces coined in the early 50's bear Napoleon's head. In 1859, after Solferino, a laurel wreath was put on the head. The coins of the republic had handsome women's heads. And these historical monuments will now disappear—monuments which one may carry in his pocket; and they have this advantage of those of marble and bronze: they can be exchanged for oranges.

Something Bound to Happen.

A young man who had been born and reared in the back woods went to Chicago and made a lot of money. Then he returned to his native village and asked his father to take a trip to the Windy City. The old man, however, was not enthusiastic over the proposition. He had read of fires, motor car accidents and other catastrophes in big cities. Finally, after much argument and persuasion on the part of his son the father reluctantly consented to undertake the journey. At a little country station he was panic stricken and tried to get permission to go back home. Once on the train his nerve began to revive and all went well until the train dashed into a tunnel as black as night. When this happened the old man grabbed his umbrella, hit his son a whack on the head and cried out:

SALLOW FACES

Often Caused by Tea and Coffee Drinking.

How many persons realize that tea and coffee so disturb digestion that they produce a muddy, yellow complexion?

A ten days' trial of Postum has proven a means, in thousands of cases, of clearing up a bad complexion.

A Washn. young lady tells her experience:

"All of us—father, mother, sister and brother—had used tea and coffee for many years until finally we all had stomach troubles, more or less.

"We all were sallow and troubled with pimples, bad breath, disagreeable taste in the mouth, and all of us simply so many bundles of nerves.

"We didn't realize that tea and coffee caused the trouble until one day we ran out of coffee and went to borrow some from a neighbor. She gave us some Postum and told us to try that.

"Although we started to make it, we all felt sure that we would be sick if we missed our strong coffee, but we tried Postum and were surprised to find it delicious.

"We read the statements on the pkg., got more and in a month and a half you wouldn't have known us. We all were able to digest our food without any trouble, each one's skin became clear, tongues cleared off, and nerves in fine condition. We never use anything now but Postum. There is nothing like it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Quite a stir has been created in political circles bv the action of the Republican convention of this district tendering the nomination for Congress to Judge L. H. Reynolds, and speculation is rife as to whether the Judge will accept or decline it. There is assuredly good reason to believe he could make a successful race against the Democratic nominee, but whether his business interests would be served by his taking the time necessary to canvass the district we are not in a position to say. We hope, however, his decision will be in the affirmative.

The report of County Treasuurer J. Wiley Littlejohn, published in this issue, is interesting and of a satisfactory nature. The report is clear and concise and "He who runs may read."

Crops in Chilton are generally said to be in fine condition and the prospects of a bountiful harvest are excellent—some going so far as as to say they have never seen so fine a crop as that of this year.

The Prohibitionists at their national convention at Atlantic City last week nominated, for the second time, Eugene W. Chafin, of Arizona, for President, and Aaron S. Watkins, of Ohio, for Vice-President. But one ballot was necessary in this convention.

That was a bad accident at Anniston last Thursday when two members of the Birmingham military in camp there were instantly killed by lightning and thirteen others injured by the same bolt, while taking refuge from a heavy shower of rain, in the mess tent.

The new "Third" party means to go thoroughly into business. A telegram recently published in the daily papers says: "That the new party shall be a seperate and distinct political organization and shall place in nomination candidates for every elective office in nation, state, county and city."

Hon. L. H. Reynolds regrets that he could not fill appointments at Mt. Pleasant thd 4th and at Cross Roads School house the 13th, on account of sickness. He has been under the treatment of Dr. Thigpen of Montgomery for some time, but we are glad to say he is much better now.

Snowstorms in July.

Early in July there occurred snowstorms in certain very warm regions, notably about Mount Etna, which at this time begins to scatter the accumulation of snow which that volcano has conserved during the winter. The crater of Etna is 3,279 meters in height, and during the winter months the snow packs into the crevices of the mountain, to be driven out by the summer winds.

CRAB'S WALK OF 98 MILES

Homing Instinct Is Shown by Some Recent Experiments in England.

Some remarkably interesting details regarding the movements and the homing instinct of the edible crab were presented to the Eastern Sea Fisheries Committee. During the past two years Fishery Inspector H. Donnison has been carrying out investigations on behalf of the committee, and the results of his work cannot fail to be of considerable use to those concerned in biological research.

In the course of an exhaustive report he stated that between July and September, 1910, nearly two thousand crabs were captured, and after being labeled were again set free along the Norfolk and Lincolnshire coasts. The crabs had recently cast their shells, and new ones were then in process of hardening.

Rewards were paid to fishermen upon returning the crabs when recaptured. They were returned to the sea at varying distances from the shore, and up to the present 21 per cent of the labeled crustaceans had been recaptured and full data tabulated.

With regard to the Norfolk crabs liberated in the places from which they were originally obtained, fifty-two were recaptured within one mile of their first home, but one traveled as far as Flamborough Head, a distance of ninety-eight statute miles. Nearly three hundred had traveled only three or four miles from where they were originally taken.—London Standard.

MARK GRAVE OF HEROINE

Clubwomen, assisted by the doctors of North Billerica, Mass., are taking steps to preserve the memory of Sarah Hodgeman, who gave her life more than a century ago in her efforts to help neighbors who were suffering from smallpox. It happened during the smallpox epidemic in 1811. On learning that a family of four persons with two guests were ill with the disease, and had no one to help them, Miss Hodgeman, against the protest of her family and friends, entered the infected house and did all in her power for its inmates.

Within two weeks it was noticed that the customary smoke did not curl from the chimney. Some of the townsfolk finally mustered up courage to investigate. It was found that the entire household, Sarah Hodgeman included, had died of the disease. It is now proposed to erect a monument in the place of the old gray headstone which marks her grave.

Hope Not Realized.

Dean Sumner of the Cathedral SS. Peter and Paul related the following story at the recent banquet of the Chicago Association of Commerce at the Hotel Sherman. "A little Jewish boy went to his father on Christmas day and asked him for a quarter. Upon receiving it he sauntered out into the city streets and didn't return until evening. His father called him as he came in and inquired what he did with the quarter he had been given. 'I went to the candy shop next door and changed it into nickels,' said the boy. 'Then I went to the news stand on the corner and changed the nickels into pennies. After that I went back to the candy shop and got five nickels for my pennies, and then I went to the delicatessen and got a quarter for my five nickels.'

"'But why did you do all that?' demanded the father.

"'I hoped that somebody might make a mistake and give me too much,' replied the boy."

A Polyglot Playwright.

M. Dario Niccodemi is a citizen of the world. He was born in Italy. He was reared in the Argentine Republic, where he was initiated in Spanish culture. He wrote his first play in the language of Cervantes. It was produced at Buenos Ayres and was called "La Duda" (The Doubt).

Soon after that an Italian actress in South America offered a prize for an acceptable play in her mother tongue. M. Niccodemi took the prize with his play "Per la Vita." He soon afterward wrote "L'Hirondelle" (The Swallow) in French and it is played at Brussels. At Paris he began his work by translating and adapting the English play of "Raffles."—Le Cri de Paris.

A difficulty occurred in front of the Post Office between F. O. Dudley and J. V. Higgins, the Jeweler, on Wednesday, the 17th inst, in which Mr. Dudley was stabbed twice under the left arm and painfully, though not dangerously wounded. Dr. Hopkins dressed the wound, and at last account was resting well. We did not learn of the causes leading up to the affray.

Mr. Higgins was arrested, charged with assault with intent to murder, and put under $500 bond.

The Gloom of English Clubs.

"There is something very triste, very depressing," he said, "about the really fashionable clubs of Pall Mall, St. James' street and Piccadilly. The stiff dignity, the somber quietude of these clubs, gets on an American's nerves.

"An American visitor to White's once said that the air of the place seemed to him to suggest that the king lay dead upstairs."

The Probable Bread Winner.

Representative Henry of Texas was talking, at a dinner in Washington, about an impecunious nobleman.

"He is engaged to a Chicago girl," said Mr. Henry. "The girl's mother was boasting about the match at a tea.

"'May,' she said, 'will occupy a very remarkable social position now. I am endeavoring to educate her up to it.'

"'Oh, I see,' said a friend. 'You are teaching her, I suppose, to wash and iron, to do plain sewing, address envelopes, or something of that sort?'"

A Rule for Each Day.

About the sanest philosophy any woman can have is to aim to make the most of each day as it comes along and not borrow trouble from the future or bemoan the regretful past. ADDING DAYS TO HIS LIFE

A correspondent sends to the Herald a paradoxical problem which, he believes, originally appeared in Piesse's "Chymical, Natural and Physical Magic," published some 50 years ago. Two persons were born at the same place, at the same moment of time. Fifty years after they both died, also at the same spot and at the same instant; yet one had lived 100 days more than the other.

The possible solution turns on a curious but very obvious point in circumnavigation. A person going round the world toward the west loses a day; going toward the east he gains one. Suppose, then, two persons born together at the Cape of Good Hope, whence a voyage round the world may be performed in a year; if one performs this constantly toward the west, in 50 years he will be 50 days behind the stationary inhabitants; and if the other sail equally toward the east, he will be 50 days in advance of them. One, therefore, will have seen 100 days more than the other.—Glasgow Herald.

Home Life in the Windy City.

Gustav H. De Kolkey of Chicago had his wife arrested on the charge of robbing him in his own house.

"My wife, her brother and a boarder," he declared, "sneaked up behind me and bore me down to the floor. Then, while the two men held me down, your honor, my wife went through my pockets and robbed me of $11."

"Did you rob your husband?" queried the court.

"I cannot tell a lie," replied Mrs. De Kolkey, simply. "There was no other way to get money out of him. He hasn't given me a cent for a year, and first I tried to chloroform him, but he always sleeps on his face. So I called my brother and we held him and I got what was in his pockets."

"Perfectly justifiable," announced the court.

In these days of high cost of living, a medicine that gets a man up out of bed and able to work in a few days is a valuable and welcome remedy. John Heath, Michigan Bar, Cal., had kidney and bladder trouble, was confined to his bed, unable to turn without help. "I commended using Foley Kidney Pills and can truly say I was relieved at once." His example is worth following. Upchurch Drug Company.

MUCH ADO ABOUT A PENNY

Sample of Extent to Which Red Tape Methods Prevail in Germany.

Germany, declares Mr. S. Baring-Gould in his book, "The Land of Teck," is absolutely swathed in red tape. In illustration, he tells an experience of his own while journeying by rail from Ober-Lenningen to Owen.

I asked at Ober-Lenningen for a third-class ticket to Owen, and supposing that I had got what I asked for, stepped into a third-class carriage. On these branch lines nearly everyone travels fourth. Before reaching the next station—only a mile from Ober-Lenningen, in fact—the inspector appeared. "Hah!" he said. "You have a fourth-class ticket, and are in a third-class compartment. The fine is six marks."

I explained, and offered at once to pass into a fourth-class carriage or pay the difference in the price of tickets.

"That will not do. You have infringed the law, and must pay six marks," the man insisted.

"I get out at Owen, and will explain matters to the station master," I said. I did so.

"The fine is six marks," said the official, peremptorily.

"But, said I, "I demanded a third-class ticket, and was given one for which I had not asked. This was an oversight on the part of the clerk."

"You should have examined your ticket," the station master insisted.

The train was delayed five minutes while we threshed out the question on the platform in great detail, and the other passengers craned their necks out of the windows of the carriages and listened with lively interest. At last, reluctantly, the station master yielded; but I must pay the difference.

"What is it?" I asked.

"One penny."

Change for the Better.

The care of the African population in the Belgian Kongo in the past has been so murderously indifferent that it is a pleasure to note a change for the better. An order has gone into effect to prevent hereafter the importation, manufacture and transportation of saccharine sweets in the Belgian African territory. Saccharine products and products sweetened with substances other than cane sugar beet sugar, milk sugar and glucose sugar—particularly those sweetened with glycerine—shall not be imported. It is specified in the order that it is meant to include in general all synthetic chemical sweetening which does not possess food value. We wish we could believe that this tariff anxiety to protect the Kongo population against deleterious sweets was something more than an exhibition of the usual protective philanthropy which bars a competitive product to make sure the sale of something else.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balsam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy, the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's house. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrives in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion. In a stroll Betty takes with Hannibal they meet Bess Hicks, daughter of the overseer, who warns Betty of danger and counsels her to leave Belle Plain at once.

Whatever the promptings that inspired this warning, they plainly had nothing to do with either liking or sympathy. Her dominating emotion seemed to be a sullen sort of resentment which lit up her glance with a dull fire; yet her feelings were so clearly and so keenly personal that Betty understood the motive that had brought her there. The explanation, she found, left her wondering just where and how her own fate was linked with that of this poor white.

"You have been waiting some time to see me?" she asked.

"Ever since along about noon."

"You were afraid to come to the house?"

"I didn't want to be seen there."

"And yet you knew I was alone."

"Alone—but how do you know who's watching the place?"

"Do you think there was reason to be afraid of that?" asked Betty.

"You're just wastin' time—just foolin' it away—and you ain't got none to spare!"

"You must tell me what I have to fear—I must know more or I shall stay just where I am!"

"Well, then, stay!" The girl turned away, and then as quickly turned back and faced Betty once more. "I reckon he'd kill me if he knew—I reckon I've earned that already—"

"Of whom are you speaking?"

"He'll have you away from here tonight!"

"He? . . . who . . . and what if I refuse to go?"

"Did they ask Charley Norton whether he wanted to live or die?" came the sinister question.

A shiver passed through Betty. She was seeing it all again—Charley as he groped among the graves with the hand of death heavy upon him.

A moment later she was alone. The girl had disappeared. There were only the shifting shadows as the wind tossed the branches of the trees, and the bands of golden light that slanted along the empty path. The fear of the unknown leaped up afresh in Betty's soul; in an instant flying feet had borne her to the boy's side.

"Come—come quick, Hannibal!" she gasped out, and seized his hand.

"What is it, Miss Betty? What's the matter?" asked Hannibal as they sped panting up the terraces.

"I don't know—only we must get away from here just as soon as we can!" Then, seeing the look of alarm on the child's face, she added more quietly, "Don't be frightened, dear, only we must go away from Belle Plain at once." But where they were to go, she had not considered.

Reaching the house, they stole to Betty's room. Her well-filled purse was the important thing; that, together with some necessary clothing, went into a small hand-bag.

"You must carry this, Hannibal; if any one sees us leave the house they'll think it something you are taking away," she explained. Hannibal nodded understandingly.

"Don't you trust your niggers, Miss Betty?" he whispered as they went from the room.

"I only trust you, dear!"

"What makes you go? Was it something that woman told you? Are they coming after us, Miss Betty? Is it Captain Murrell?"

"Captain Murrell?" There was fear, of mystery now, but more of terror; and her hand stole up to her heart, and, white and slim, rested against the black fabric of her dress.

"Don't you be scared, Miss Betty!" said Hannibal.

They went silently from the house and again crossed the lawn to the terrace. Under the leafy arch which canopied them there was already the deep purple of twilight.

"Do you reckon it were Captain Murrell shot Mr. Norton, Miss Betty?" asked Hannibal in a shuddering whisper.

"Hush—Oh, hush, Hannibal! It is too awful to even speak of—" and, sobbing and half hysterical, she covered her face with her hands.

"But where are we going, Miss Betty?" asked the boy.

"I don't know, dear!" She had an agonizing sense of the night's approach and of her own utter helplessness.

"I'll tell you what, Miss Betty, let's go to the judge and Mr. Mahaffy!" said Hannibal.

"Judge Price?" She had not thought of him as a possible protector.

"Why, Miss Betty, ain't I told you he ain't afraid of nothing? We could walk to Raleigh easy if you don't want your niggers to hook up a team for you."

Betty suddenly remembered the carriage which had taken the judge into town; she was sure it had not yet returned.

"We will go to the judge, Hannibal! George, who drove him into Raleigh, has not come back; if we hurry we may meet him on the road."

Screened by the thick shadows, they passed up the path that edged the bayou; at the head of the inlet they entered a clearing, and crossing this they came to the corn-field which lay between the house and the high-road. Following one of the shock rows they hurried to the mouth of the lane.

"Hannibal, I don't want to tell the judge why I am leaving Belle Plain—about the woman, I mean," said Betty.

"You reckon they'd kill her, don't you, Miss Betty, if they knew what she'd done?" speculated the boy. It occurred to him that an adequate explanation of their flight would require preparation, since the judge was at all times singularly alive to the slightest discrepancy of statement. They had issued from the corn-field and went along the road toward Raleigh. Suddenly Betty paused.

"Hark!" she whispered.

"It were nothing, Miss Betty," said Hannibal reassuringly, and they hurried forward again. In the utter stillness through which they moved Betty heard the beating of her own heart, and the soft and all but inaudible patter of the boy's bare feet on the warm dust of the road. Vague forms that resolved themselves into trees and bushes seemed to creep toward them out of the night's black uncertainty. Once more Betty paused.

"It were nothing, Miss Betty," said Hannibal as before, and he returned to his consideration of the judge. He sensed something of that intellectual nimbleness which his patron's physical make-up in nowise suggested, since his face was a mask that usually left one in doubt as to just how much of what he heard succeeded in making its impression on him; but the boy knew that Slocum Price's blind side was a shelterless exposure.

"You don't think the carriage could have passed us while we were crossing the corn-field?" said Betty.

"No, I reckon we couldn't a-missed hearing it," answered Hannibal. He had scarcely spoken when they caught the rattle of wheels and the beat of hoofs. These sounds swept nearer and nearer, and the darkness disgorged the Belle Plain team and carriage.

"Whoa, you!" and George reined in his horses with a jerk. "Who's dar?" he asked, bending forward on the box as he sought to pierce the darkness with his glance.

"George—"

"Oh, it you, Missy?"

"Yes, I wish you to drive me into Raleigh," said Betty, and she and Hannibal entered the carriage.

"All right, Missy. Yo'-all ready fo' me to go along out o' here?"

"Yes—drive fast, George!" urged Betty.

"It's right dark fo' fas' driving', Missy, with the road jes' aimin' fo' to bus' yo' springs with chuckholes!" He had turned his horses' heads in the direction of Raleigh while he was speaking. "It's scandalous black in these heah woods, Missy—I 'clar' I never seen it no blacker!"

The carriage swung forward for perhaps a hundred years, then suddenly the horses came to a dead stop.

"Go along on, dar!" cried George, and struck them with his whip, but the horses only reared and plunged.

"Hold on, nigger!" said a rough voice out of the darkness.

Two men stepped to the side of the carriage.

"Show your light, Bunker," said the same rough voice that had spoken before. Instantly a hooded lantern was uncovered, and Hannibal uttered a cry of terror. He was looking into the face of Slosson, the tavern-keeper.

CHAPTER XIX.

Prisoners.

In the face of Betty's indignant protest Slosson and the man named Bunker climbed into the carriage.

"Don't you be scared, ma'am," said the tavern-keeper, who smelt strongly of whisky. "I wouldn't lift my hand ag'in no good-looking female except in kindness."

"How dare you stop my carriage?" cried Betty, with a very genuine anger which for the moment dominated all her other emotions. She struggled to her feet, but Slosson put out a heavy hand and thrust her back.

"There now," he urged soothingly. "Why make a fuss? We ain't going to harm you; we wouldn't for no sum of money. Drive on, Jim—drive like hell!" This last was addressed to the man who had taken George's place on the box, where a fourth member of Slosson's band had forced the coachman down into the narrow space between the seat and dashboard, and was holding a pistol to his head while he sternly enjoined silence.

With a word to the horses Jim swung about and the carriage rolled off through the night at a breakneck pace. Betty's shaking hands drew Hannibal closer to her side as she felt the surge of her terrors rise within her. Who were these men—where could they be taking her—and for what purpose? The events of the past week linked themselves in tragic sequence in her mind. What was it she had to fear? Was it Tom for whom these men were acting? Tom who would profit greatly by her disappearance or death!

They swept past the entrance at Belle Plain, past a break in the wall of the forest where the pale light of stars showed Betty the cornfield she and Hannibal had but lately crossed, and then on into pitchy darkness again. She clung to the desperate hope that they might meet some one on the road, when she could cry out and give the alarm. She held herself in readiness for this, but there was only the steady pounding of the big bays as Jim with voice and whip urged them forward. At last he abruptly checked them, and Bunker and Slosson sprang from their seats.

"Get down, ma'am!" said the latter.

"Where are you taking me?" asked Betty, in a voice that shook in spite of her efforts to control it.

"You must hurry, ma'am," urged Slosson impatiently.

"I won't move until I know where you intend taking me!" said Betty. "If I am to die—"

Mr. Slosson laughed loudly and indulgently.

"You ain't. If you don't want to walk, I'm man enough fo' to tote you. We ain't far to go, and I've tackled jobs I'd a heap less heart fo' in my time," he concluded gallantly. From the opposite side of the carriage Bunker swore nervously. He desired to know if they were to stand there talking all night. "Shut your filthy mouth, Bunker, and see you keep tight hold of that young rip-staver," said Slosson. "He's a perfect eel—I've had dealings with him afore!"

"You tried to kill my Uncle Bob—at the tavern, you and Captain Murrell. I heard you, and I seen you drag him to the river!" cried Hannibal.

Slosson gave a start of astonishment at this.

"Why, ain't he hateful?" he exclaimed aghast. "See here, young feller, that's no kind of a way fo' you to talk to a man who has riz his ten children!"

Again Bunker swore, while Jim told Slosson to make haste. This popular clamor served to recall the tavern-keeper to a sense of duty.

"Ma'am, like I should tote you, or will you walk?" he inquired, and reaching out his hand took hold of Betty.

"I'll walk," said the girl quickly, shrinking from the contact.

"Keep close at my heels, Bunker, you tuck along after her with the boy."

"What about this nigger?" asked the fourth man.

"Fetch him along with us," said Slosson. They turned from the road while he was speaking and entered a narrow path that led off through the woods, apparently in the direction of the river. A moment later Betty heard the carriage drive away. They went onward in silence for a little time, then Slosson spoke over his shoulder.

"Yes, ma'am, I've riz ten children, but none of 'em was like him—I trained 'em up to the minute!" Mr. Slosson seemed to have passed completely under the spell of his domestic recollections, for he continued with just a touch of reminiscent sadness in his tone. "There was all told four Mrs. Slossons: two of 'em was South Carolinians, one was from Georgia, and the last was a widow lady out of east Tennessee. She'd buried three husbands, and I figured we could start perfectly even." The intrinsic fairness of this start made its strong appeal. Mr. Slosson dwelt upon it with satisfaction. "She had three to her credit, I had three to mine; neither could crow none over the other."

BROKE OUT IN HEAT RASH

822 Georgia Ave., East Nashville, Tenn.—"My baby was about two months old when he began to break out in small red pimples like heat rash, afterward turning into festers. They gradually spread until his little head, face, groins and chest, his head being most affected, became a mass of sores with a great deal of corruption. It became offensive and gradually grew worse. I kept a white cap on him to keep him from scratching, it seemed to itch so badly. It made him cross and his chest and groins would often bleed.

"Nothing seemed to help it, and I had almost come to the conclusion that my baby's case was hopeless, when hearing of the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, I decided to try it. I noticed at once that baby rested better. I continued it for a few weeks and my baby was entirely cured by the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. They cured where all others failed." (Signed) Mr. E. O. Davis, Nov. 28, 1912.

She Was a Duster.

Mrs. Sutton advertised for a woman to do general housework, and in answer a colored girl called, announcing that she had come for the position.

"Are you a good cook?" asked Mrs. Sutton.

"No, indeed, I don't cook," was the reply.

"Are you a good laundress?"

"Can you sweep?" asked Mrs. Sutton.

"No," was the positive answer. "I'm not strong enough."

"Well," said the lady of the house, quite exasperated, "may I ask what you can do?"

"I dusts," came the placid reply.—Everybody's.

Shock for a Brother.

"John," said an eminent physician, wearily, entering his home after a hard day's work, "John, if anyone calls excuse me."

"Yes, suh," agreed John, the old family darkey.

"Just say," explained the doctor, "that the masseur is with me."

"I want to see the doctor at once," said he.

"Yuh can't do it, sur," solemnly announced the old darkey, turning up his eyes till the whites alone showed. "Yuh can't do it, suh. The doctor, suh, am wid de Messiah."—New York Evening Sun.

Deliberating.

The Rev. James Hamilton, minister of Liverpool, while on holiday in Scotland, had a narrow escape from drowning. Accompanied by a boy, Mr. Hamilton was fishing for sea-trout when he slipped on a stone, lost his balance, and being encumbered with heavy wading boots, had great difficulty in keeping his head above water. Finally he managed to get back to the shore, although in a very exhausted state, and said to the boy: "I noticed that you never tried to help me." "Na," was the deliberate response, "but I was thinkin' o't."

Mixture of Caution and Economy.

At the Union depot a few evenings ago a mother who had gone to see her daughter, a miss of about 18 years, safely started on a journey, was heard to give the young lady the following words of advice just before the train started: "Now, good-by, my dear. Take good care of yourself and remember not to be too free with strangers on the train. But if a nice-looking man should speak to you be polite to him—he may buy your supper for you."—Kansas City Star.

RECORD OF TIME'S CHANGES

Surely Visitor to the Scenes of His Boyhood Could Not Fail to Be Impressed.

"I reckon you see the old town looking some different from what it looked when you left it thirty years ago," said Uncle Eb Skinner to the native returning for a visit to the scenes of his boyhood. "All o' the back part o' Peevy's store is new since your day here, an' that bay winder in the drug store was put in since you left us. The deepo used to be painted yeller instid o' red, an' the town hall is het by steam now instid o' with stoves, like it used to was in your time. Then two iron hitch posts in front o' the postoffice ain't been there more than ten years, and that stone watering trough instid o' the old wooden one you remember is another change. I reckon you've noticed that Hi Greene has raised his house a story an' added a summer kitchen. That piazzy in front o' the hotel is another change in the old town, an', of course, you've noticed the new hoss sheds back o' the church an' the broom shop wa'n't here when you was a boy with us. It employs five hands reg'lar an' seven in the rush season. Time makes changes, as I reckon you have seen."—From Judge.

They Are Overworked Now.

Four-year-old Dick had made an important discovery that his hair would pull out if enough force was exerted, and was absorbed in proving the fascinating find on his forelock. His sister—aged seven—noted the proceeding with round-eyed horror.

"Dickie! Dickie!" she cried, "you mustn't do that!"

"Why?" demanded Dickie, with the cynicism of childhood.

"Because the Bible says that all your hairs are numbered—and if you pull any out you'll make a lot of extra bookkeeping for the angels."

EDUCATION FOR THE FARMER

Men who were farmers fifteen years ago, but who have become city business men, would find a vast change in the methods of tilling the soil and raising crops were they to return to their original way of earning a livelihood. Farming methods have undergone a wonderful transformation. Many labor-saving devices have been invented, new ways of dealing with parasites have been discovered, intensive farming is in vogue, and the system of rotating crops is in force. The farmer of fifteen years ago would find today that planting and growing and doctoring are on a more scientific basis, and that profits are more certain and regular. While the knowledge of successful experiments was circulated from farmer by word of mouth in the old days, new educational forces are now at work, says the Washington Post. Probably the greatest of these is the department of agriculture. From a statement just issued, it appears that nearly 200,000,000 publications of all kinds have been printed and distributed since Secretary Wilson assumed control. More than half that number has been circulated in the last five years. Four hundred and fifty different pamphlets, discussing subjects of special interest to farmers and expressed in terms understood by all, have been issued, and 84,000,000 copies have been placed in the hands of applicants, mostly farmers, who had need of the information they contained; and of these more than 39,000,000 were distributed within the last five years. The magnitude of this work of disseminating the information so earnestly sought and so carefully verified is only measurable by the immense advance of scientific agricultural knowledge and practice by the progressive farmers of the country. It has cost many thousands of dollars to issue all the pamphlets and documents of various kinds, but inasmuch as millions of dollars have been saved to the farmers, the investment has been a very profitable one.

Better Pastures.

A little observation will prove to any one that a great change for the better might be made in the pastures of this country. There are many farmers who are not getting what they ought to from this part of their land. One of the worst features about the pasture is the use which many are making of the feed by feeding nothing but poor cattle.

Difference in Butter.

The only difference between butter that is worth 30 cents per pound and butter that is worth 5 cents per pound is the intelligence of the producer and manufacturer. It takes the same kind of raw product for both.

Chickens in the Garden.

The one time when chickens may be admitted to the garden is when there are asparagus beetles to be destroyed. In the same way, the services of a few ducks should be obtained to eliminate potato bugs.

PROGRESSIVENESS IN SOUTH

Dr. Maurice F. Egan, Minister to Denmark, Relate His Views of the Farmers of Dixie.

A new solution for the high cost of living problem has been found by Dr. Maurice Francis Egan, American minister to Denmark, after a month's journey through the south. Mr. Egan was invited to make the trip by the Southern Commercial Congress, in order to lecture on farming in "Dixie."

Mr. Egan's opinion of the farmer of the states he visited is not very flattering, but he declares that they are rapidly advancing, and in the course of time "will be on a par, in so far as efficient conservation of crops is concerned, with the ruralites of Denmark." To a newspaper representative Mr. Egan said:

"The Danish farmers are an intelligent class of persons and devote all their time to close study of their soil and how to improve its income. They are all members of the Co-operative Society, which, to my mind, is the solution of the high cost of living problem. Such a society does away absolutely with the middleman, and in addition to reducing the price of the commodity to the consumer, yields a larger profit to the producer.

"Denmark is purely an agricultural country. There are no industries and no minerals, therefore, the people must turn their attention to earn their living by agricultural pursuits. They have their choice between conserving their soil and emigrating, and they have chosen the former with all the patriotism worthy of good Danes.

"An opinion I formed on my trip may surprise the majority of your readers, but I am convinced that it is a fact. I believe that the farming country of the southern states is more adapted to the production of butter, eggs and bacon than it is for the raising of cotton and tobacco.

"Denmark farmers get every inch of fertility out of their soil, while American farmers do not. One Mississippi farmer told me that he had 'exhausted' three farms, and would again move as soon as the one he is now tilling is exhausted. Denmark farmers are educated and do not 'exhaust' their soil. They believe in rotation of crops. A specialist visits each farmer every eighteen months and explains the workings of the farm.

"The southern farmers are showing a great interest in conservation, and are becoming more open-minded. They are ever ready to receive suggestions which will enable them to profit most, and should be. It is pathetic to note that these men, who live on the most beautiful and fertile soil in the world, do not realize their advantages. There the cattle could graze all the year round. As it is, the feeding of live stock is much neglected.

"The key that will release them from their handicap is found in the co-operative system and education."

Assurance of Farm.

There is nothing like the farm when hard times come knocking at the door. There may not be much money going in seasons of stress, but there is always the assurance of a full table, a roof over one's head and no fear of an evicting landlord.

Poor Citizen.

The man who provides himself with everything new and useful in the way of labor-saving machinery may be a good farmer but he is a poor citizen and falls far short of his duty if he fails to provide equal facilities to help his wife in her share of the work.

Thinker Is a Winner.

The farmer may not have as much time to read as would be good for him, but he has plenty of time to think. And the thinking farmer, if he thinks along right lines and backs his thought with his muscle, is a sure thing winner.

Co-Operation.

Economy may also be practiced by several poultrymen in one locality co-operating and buying their grain in carload or half carload lots, direct from the miller; in this way saving the profits of the local grain dealer.

Kindness Never Lost.

Kindness to animals as well as to humans is never lost. It ennobles the nature of the giver, whether there be an immediate or a visible return or not. Usually it does its work unseen.

Advantage of Co-Operation.

One advantage of co-operative dairy improvement associations, says Prof. Hayden, is that proved bulls can be passed from one herd to another. Another is that money can be saved by co-operative advertising.

Developing Milkers.

Best Looking Farms.

The best looking farms, that is, the farms that have the best houses and stables, are usually farms that look to the dairy cow for the larger part of the revenue.

A Question of Names.

In some of the country districts of Ireland it is not an uncommon thing to see carts with the owners' names chalked on to save the expense of painting. Practical jokers delight in rubbing out these signs to annoy the owners.

A constabulary sergeant one day accosted a countryman whose name had been thus wiped out unknown to him.

"Is this your cart, my good man?"

"Of course it is!" was the reply. "Do you see anything the matter wid it?"

"I observe," said the pompous policeman, "that your name is o'blitherated."

"Then ye're wrong," quoth the countryman, who had never come across the long word before, "for me name's O'Flaherty, and I don't care who knows it."—Youth's Companion.

Her Ruling Passion.

The woman who had chased dust and dirt all her life finally reached St. Peter.

"Come in, you poor, tired woman," he said, and held the gate ajar.

But the woman hesitated.

"Tell me first," she said, "how often you clean house?"

The saint smiled.

"You can't shake off the ruling passion, can you?" he said. "Oh, well, step inside and they'll give you a broom and dustpan instead of a harp."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

True to His Trust.

"Father," asked the beautiful girl, "did you bring home that material for my new skirt?"

"Yes."

"Where is it?"

"Let me see? Wait now. Don't be impatient! I didn't forget it. I'm sure I've got it in one of my pockets, somewhere."

Seemed Like More.

The Professor—In 140 wasps' nests there are an average of 25,000 insects.

The Student—Why, professor, I disturbed just one nest one day, and I'll bet there were more than 25,000 in that one."

SOLACE IN HIS MISFORTUNE

Entombed Miner Had at Least One Pleasant Thought After Two Days of Suffering.

Miners are among the most heroic people in the world. Danger is always beside them, and they are schooled to believe that at any time they may come face to face with death. The result of this is that they are humorous in their boldness.

In one of the mines of Pennsylvania there was a cave-in which imprisoned a miner named Jack Thornton. The accident happened on Friday afternoon, and the fellow laborers of the entombed man set to work at once to dig him out. It was not until Sunday morning, however, that they reached his prison chamber, and by this time they were wondering whether he had been suffocated or starved to death. One of them stuck his head through the aperture made by the picks of the rescuers and called out:

"Jack, are you all right?"

"All right," came the reply, and then after a pause: "What day is this?"

"Sunday!" exclaimed the friend.

"Gee!" exclaimed Jack, "I'm glad of that. That was one Saturday night when those saloonkeepers didn't get my wages."—Popular Magazine.

Making Cheese In Olden Days.

Cheese was made by the old-time farmers in the summer on the co-operative plan by which four cattle owners owning say 14 milch cows, received all the milk night and morning, according to the daily yield of their little herd. Thus given two families having five cows each, one with three and one with one, supposing that the average yield per cow was the same, in two weeks, two owners would make five cheeses each; one would press three, and one only one cheese, but this one would be as good and as large as any of the rest.—"Nobility of the Trades—The Farmer," Charles Winslow Hall, in National Magazine.

Good Bait.

Aunt Sarah, cook in a Richmond family, took home a dish of macaroni from her mistress' table for the edification of her own family. When her children had been assured that it was good they proceeded to eat with great gusto. The next morning Aunt Sarah discovered two of her offspring in the yard turning over stones and soil and scratching vigorously in the earth.

Simple Explanation.

To illustrate a point that he was making—that his was the race with a future and not a race with a past—Booker T. Washington told this little story the other day.

He was standing by his door one morning when old Aunt Caroline went by.

"Good morning, Aunt Caroline," he said. "Where are you going this morning?"

"Lawzee, Mista' Wash'ton," she replied. "I'se done been whar I'se gwine."—Kansas City Star.

The Heirloom.

A Pittsburg drummer in a small town dropped into a place to get a bite to eat. The place looked familiar, but he didn't know the proprietor.

"No; I just inherited it from my father."

"Ah, yes. I knew him. I recognize this old cheese sandwich on the counter."

STATES AWAKING TO DANGER

Nearly 4,000 additional hospital beds for consumptives in 29 states were provided during the year ending June 1, according to a statement issued by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. This makes a total of over 30,000 beds, but only about one for every indigent tuberculosis patient in this country.

In the last five years, the hospital provision for consumptives has increased from 14,428 in 1907, to over 30,000 in 1912, or over 10 per cent. New York state leads in the number of beds, having 8,350 on June 1; Massachusetts comes next with 2,800; and Pennsylvania a close third with 2,700. Alabama showed the greatest percentage of increase in the last year by adding 57 new beds to its 42 a year ago. Georgia comes next with 109 beds added to 240 a year ago. New York has the greatest numerical increase, having provided over 1,800 additional beds in the year.

"Oh, mother, look! The moon has laid an egg!"

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientific for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created among specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book of Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng. and decide for themselves whether the New French Remedy "THERAPION" No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 is what they require and have been seeking in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Death Lurks In A Weak Heart

Doctors Use This for Eczema

Dr. Evans, Ex-Commissioner of Health, says: "There is almost no relation between skin diseases and the blood." The skin must be cured through the skin. The germs must be washed out, and so salves have long ago been found worthless. The most advanced physicians of this country are now agreed on this, and are prescribing a wash of wintergreen, thymol and other ingredients for eczema and all other skin diseases. This compound is known as D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

Dr. Holmes, the well known skin specialist writes: "I am convinced that the D.D.D. Prescription is as much a specific for eczema as quinine for malaria. We have been prescribing the D.D.D. remedy for years."

We, ourselves vouch for the D.D.D. Prescription for eczema and absolutely guarantee that it will take away the itch the instant you apply it.

If you are suffering from any form of skin trouble we would like to have you come to our store, for we have had the agency of this remedy for so many years that we can tell you all about D.D.D. Prescription and how it cures eczema. In fact, we are so sure of what D.D.D. will do for you that we will be glad to let you have a $1 bottle on our guarantee that it will cost you nothing unless you find that it does the work. For that matter a trial bottle for 25c ought to be enough to absolutely prove the merits of the remedy.

Drop into our store anyway and we will tell you all about this great remedy.

FIRST OF ANIMAL HOSPITALS

More Than 2,000 Years Ago One Was Established in India, Says an Authority.

The New York women who have opened a free animal dispensary in this city are regarded as pioneers in a good work. As a matter of fact one must go to the Orient and look back more than 2,000 years to find the first animal hospital known.

The famous Buddhist emperor of India, Asoka, whose long reign from 264 to 227 B. C. abounded in many good works, was probably the earliest to establish a hospital for the treatment of animals, says Our Dumb Animals. Asoka was a true humanitarian as well as a most powerful sovereign and although ruling a vast domain became deeply impressed by the horrors of warfare.

He gave up his desire for conquest and the rock inscriptions, which are still extant, record such beneficent edicts of his as the counseling of planting shade trees, the digging of wells, sending out of missionaries, appointment of special officers to supervise charities, the establishing of hospitals for human kind and animals.

It is of interest to know that the last remaining of Asoka's hospitals was devoted to animals. It covered twenty-five acres and was divided into proper wards and courts for the accommodation of the patients. When an animal was sick or injured its master had only to bring it to the hospital, where it was cared for without regard to the caste of its owner, and where, if necessary, it found an asylum in old age.

Uncle Joe's Reply.

Some members of the house heard a few days ago the strangest combination of sacred and profane language which had ever been uttered on that floor. During a debate Uncle Joe Cannon went after A. Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania, and handled him without gloves. Cannon is a Quaker and so is Palmer. When conversing privately they drop into the Quaker vernacular. After the debate Palmer went to the former speaker, who is thirty-six years older than himself.

"Uncle Joe," he said, "thee treated me a little roughly in the debate today."

"Well," replied Uncle Joe, in a mixture of Quaker and Cannonian English, "perhaps I did treat thee a little severely, but blankety-blank, thou deserved every damned thing I said."

LAZY LIVER SPOILS DAY'S WORK

Don't Let a Torpid Liver Knock You Out of a Day's Work—There is a Better Way—Read About It.

A man feels very little like working and a child don't want to go to school when bilious or constipated. If you try calomel to cure you the chances are that you will be so weakened by its after-effects that you will be laid up for two or three days more. So we say "Don't take calomel." We have a perfect substitute that we can fully guarantee to cure constipation and liven up the liver just as quickly as calomel, but without any of the bad after-effects of calomel. The name of this tonic is Dodson's Liver-tone. It is a pleasant tasting vegetable tonic that mildly stimulates the liver and causes it to work just right to cleanse the ody without any danger of salivation. When you try it if you do not say that it is a perfect substitute for calomel, come right in and get your money back. The Alred Drug Company. ey back. The Upchurch Drug Co.

THRIFT OF OZARK COUPLE

Took Matter of Presents Into Their Own Hands on Silver Wedding Anniversary.

Everyone who has got several gifts exactly alike will appreciate the shrewdness of this Ozark couple who, in the matter of presents, took things into their own hands.

"Speakin' of being thirsty," said Hi Buck, "reckon Cy Wasson and his wife, that came here from Iowa, about take the prize."

"How's that?" asked the stranger who was waiting in front of the blacksmith shop while his horse was being shod.

"Well, you see Cy and Mirandy wanted to celebrate their silver wedding. They had never celebrated any anniversary before because, as Mirandy told my wife, the silver wedding was the first one where the presents would be worth more than the victuals.

"Even then they worried a good deal for fear everybody would bring pickle forks or butter knives. But after a while they hit on an idea that worked first rate.

"They wrote at the bottom of the invitations, asking the folks not to buy presents until they got there, for the jeweler from Buckeye Bridge would be in the yard with a full line of silverware, and no two pieces alike."

"That was clever," said the stranger. "Picked out their own presents, you might say."

"Yes," said Hi, "but that wasn't the best part of it. We learned afterward they dickered with the jeweler and got him to give them 20 per cent. on all he sold."—Youth's Companion.

AMERICAN DRY FLY FISHING

American dry fly fishing may be defined briefly as the art of displaying to the trout a single artificial fly floating upon the surface of the stream in the exact manner of the natural insect.

Upon occasions, somewhat rare indeed, but nevertheless of sufficient frequency to render the fact noteworthy, the American dry fly man casts consciously to a rising and feeding trout—the invariable custom of the English dry fly "purist."

On the trout streams of this country, however, the orthodox manner of fishing and floating fly is to fish all the water as when wet fly casting.

In America, owing to the fact that the dry fly angler fishes the water and not the rise, wet and dry fly fishing are far more closely related than is the case in England, where the orthodox sportsman stalks the trout, casting exclusively to a rising and feeding fish.—Outing.

DIVORCED FROM DEAD MAN

Queer Requirements Made in France That Official Records May Be Completed.

In France, as in some other countries, every citizen has an official history. Not as varied and interesting as his real history, but still important. From this there follow at times quaint consequences. If a woman is married, for example, a wife she remains officially though the husband may be missing.

Consider the case of the painter who went fishing on Authie bay. He has not since been seen. The body of one man who went with him was washed ashore lifeless. You would call this tolerably convincing proof that his wife had been made a widow. She thought so, and in due time she sought to have it recorded in her official history that she was a widow. We are familiar with applications to a court of justice for leave to presume the death of persons who have vanished. But the French judge was not to be so easily persuaded as our courts. The wife was in her official history a wife and there was no certificate to justify her appellation being changed to widow. Without a certificate or reasonable documentary evidence no man obviously ought to die.

There was a way round. The bereaved woman applied for a divorce on the ground of desertion. Since death is beyond dispute the most complete kind of desertion, the court of Montreuil decided that she could not be denied. So the widow is recognized as an independent woman and apparently both the law and she are satisfied. But you will observe that the official history must now record the wife of a dead man as a divorcee, which does not seem very creditable to official history.

CORINTH.

The all-day singing at this place was a grand success. Everybody seemed to enjoy the day very much. The day was well spent in song service. The program for the day was rendered as follows:

Devotional exercises by E. L. Jones; Welcome Address by J. A. Jones.

First business was to elect a chairman for the day. W. B. Jones was elected chairman.

Followed by S. M. Yates, 25 minutes; J. M. Williams, 25 minutes; Lee Robinson, 25 minutes. Recess, 15 minutes.

After dinner N. J. Jones entertained the class 20 minutes. Followed by W. M. Devaughn, 20 minutes, and T. L. Robinson, 15 minutes. Recess, 15 minutes.

After recess, L. T. Grant sang 20 minutes; J. R. Robinson 20 minutes, J. M. Williams, 20 minutes. Day's service closed with the good old song, "Nearer my God to Thee."

We hope to some day meet at Corinth in a song service such as this one was.

WHY THE PLANETS COLLIDE

Gravity and Other Agencies Are at Work in Bringing Stars Together.

There is good reason to believe that the bodies in space—both luminous and dead—occasionally fall together, and his conception of such an event was given by Prof. A. W. Bickerton in a late Royal Institution lecture. The collisions do not come at random. Gravity and other agencies are at work, and before two suns collide they come into each other's influence for hundreds of years, being drawn towards each other with constantly increasing speed. As the velocity would be proportionate to size, the collision would take place in the same time—about three-fourths of an hour—for all bodies. With the collision the two stars become a new one, the tremendous speed is suddenly converted into heat, and the explosive force expands the new star at the rate of millions of miles an hour. This, Professor Bickerton believes, explains the origin of Nova Persei, which suddenly flashed out in 1901 with 10,000 times the brilliancy of our sun. This star became the brightest in the heavens except Sirius, and was the most brilliant new star that has appeared in 300 years.

An Expert Name Manufacturer.

At a dinner in New York William Ray Gardiner, the advertising expert, scored neatly off an advertising fad that has of late been rather overdone.

"A young couple," he began, "had been blessed with the advent of a little son, and the wife, at dinner one evening, said:

"'What shall we name our darling, Jim?'

"Jim wrinkled his brow and replied:

"'Well, I submit Childa, Firstbornio, Theboi, Allours, Sunne, Ourown, Ourownson—'

"But at this point his wife shut him up. He could, of course, have kept on indefinitely. You see, he was one of those advertisement writers who invent new names for breakfast foods, tinned soups and patent medicines."

A Clear Case.

"You claim that the wheel of the defendant's car passed over your stomach," said the defendant's attorney to the plaintiff on the stand. "Yet, here is your open-faced watch which you testify to having carried in your vest pocket at the time, and the crystal isn't even cracked. How do you account for that?"

"Why," said the plaintiff, "the car was going so fast there wasn't time for the crystal to break, sir."—Harper's Weekly.

St. Albans, which claims the oldest inhabited house in England, now an inn, is rich in old hostelries. The Peahen there dates back to the fifteenth century, though the present building is modern, save for some old woodwork in the coffee room. The Priory, too, in Holywell Hill, was once the Bull inn, and as such was visited by Queen Elizabeth; while off the High street is the George inn, dating from 1446, which at one time had its private chapel for the use of its guests.—London Chronicle.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Verbena, July 22, 1912.

Editor Union and Banner:

Please allow me space in your paper to say a few words in reply to the "Blue Jay."

I want to say I did not write for any controversy, for I did ont think that any sane American would object to old time songs, or especially old time religion that saved our fathers and grandfathers and all that have been saved and the only chance for those that are not saved. As all who read my piece know that I did not object to the progress of the human mind, though some people are so carried away with the progress of today and destitute of religion. When anyone speaks of religion they think they are speaking of progress. Our Savior said before the consummation of the world it would be like it was in the days of Noah, the people were marrying and given in marriage. It seemed as if they were unconscious of the great destruction that hung over them, for their time was near. So when people get to the place that they object to old time religion and say it would do when people ate ashcakes, I think the sun of time is near tipping the western hills.

Mr. Jay speaks of the former days of ignorance. I agree that the human has made great progress and has better chances in the shiftings of the world, but that is not the subject. I say the greatest knowledge and intelligence is found in old time religion. It will stand when the progress of the world fails. It will stand when the world is on fire.

So I write with due respect to Mr. Jay and all the readers of The Union, so I still contend for the old time religion.

FRIEND TO ALL.

FAMILY RE-UNION.

On Saturday, July 20th, the Killingsworth family met at the home of Mr. W. H. Killingsworth, two miles north of Jemison, and spent a most enjoyable day.

In the morning there were several short speeches and in the afternoon the crowd was entertained by Mrs. Shade Laird with a temperance lecture that was full of logic and should go far toward stamping out the use of whiskey in our country.

It is to be hoped that this prosperous and influential family will continue these re-unions each year and that they will be blessed with a continuance of good health and prosperity such as they have enjoyed in the past.

MARS HILL.

Editor Union-Banner:

The singing at this place Saturday was fine, and so was the ice cream and lemonade.

At three o'clock Mars Hill and Providence ball teams crossed bats, Providence with pitcher and catcher from Montevallo. The game was fine up to the last half of the seventh inning, Mars Hill at the bat, the Providence pitcher giving out. Scores standing 1 and 1, no one out. The pitcher four feet from his box made a balk, being so tall threw the ball, hit the batter, which gave him his base. And for this reason the Mr. Nabors so tall, got raw and quit because he saw he would lose. The whole trouble with Providence must have been the hookworm, as they hooked two of the Mars Hill boys' balls and left for further practice.

Say, boys, when you think you have practiced enough, send the balls back and come and finish the game. In this game Mars Hill scores nine to Providence nothing.

Tipping the Porter.

On a recent trip to California Bert Walker says the Pullman porter acted as though he wanted something from the passengers. "What do you want?" Bert asked him. THORSBY.

Miss Clara Soberg has gone North to visit friends.

The Lutheran Sunday School picnic will be celebrated next Thursday in Thorson's Park.

Several carloads of peaches have already been shipped from Thorsby, and many more are yet to go.

J. L. Foss has sold his meat business to Mr. Hayes.

The churches are feeling the effects of vacation time. There were no services in the Baptist or Congregational Churches Sunday.

J. Bice and C. A. Pugh were called to Ensley Saturday last to attend the funeral of little Ola, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hairell. The remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Shelby, the former home of Mr. and Mrs. Hairell. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved parents.

The mayor, with the aid of the marshal, captured a blind tiger Friday afternoon and two or three persons were put under bond to the town on account of it. Good for the mayor. Let's get behind him and turn up all the blind tigers in Thorsby and community.

J. J. Lloyd, the shoe dealer, expects to leave this week. He and his wife will remain in the North until the first of December.

The Guild social, which was to be held with Mrs. Barrett has been postponed.

Crops are looking fine around Thorsby.

Sunday evening Mr. Bradley Smith and Miss Fannie Coleman were united in marriage. They left Monday morning for Mississippi.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Fifth District Sunday School Convention was held at Mountain Creek on July 17.

The convention was fine, although the weather was bad. The schools were well represented—eight of the ten schools.

All the speakers were present except Mr. C. R. Russell and Miss Mary C. Gibson. We regret very much the absence of both, although Miss Della Williams ably filled Miss Gibson's place.

It is requested that the people of Mountain Creek be thanked for their kindness shown the people of the convention.

The next convention will be held with Prospect School.

Four men were painfully injured and were carried to Montgomery. The track was cleared and after some delay traffic wes resumed.

PROVIDENCE.

Editor Union and Banner:

As it's been quite a good while since I have been heard from, will now try to say just a few words in behalf of our community. First I will say the health of the community is fairly good at the present. Crops are as good as could be expected, and sawmilling is still booming, but I must confess that our Sunday school is not quite so good as I would like to see. Hope it will soon be on the mend, so come one, come all, and let's make our school prosper through the summer months.

Quite a number of our people attended the convention at Enon last Sunday and report a delightful time, which we are always sure to have when we go there.

Mr. Vernon Shaw, accompanied by Mr. Earnest Mahan, of Birmingham, visited down near Mineral Springs Sunday—went to see "their teachers," I suppose.

The ice cream supper at Mr. Matheny's Friday night, was a decided success, says every one who was present, music being furnished by Messrs. Connell and Wilson. We highly appreciate the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Matheny.

We are indeed glad to say that Mrs. Clay Skipper, who has been sick for some time, is improving and is now visiting her sister near Irvin's schoolhouse. We hope she will continue to improve.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Sims and daughter spent Saturday night with their daughter, Mrs. Lucas, and was at Enon Sunday.

Mrs. Laura Cooper, of Birmingham, spent Saturday night at Mr. Lowery's.

Messrs. Jack Nabors, J. D. and Marvin Lawley, all of Dogwood, spent Saturday night at Mr. W. H. Shaw's and were accompanied to Enon Sunday by Willie G. Shaw.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Busby spent Sunday with Mr. Busby's father.

Miss Essie Watson and Bill Martin went to Enon Sunday.

Messrs. George Cobb and Cebe Wilson called to see the Misses Esther and Ora Shaw.

Quite a lot of our people visited the picnics Saturday, some at Kalona and some at Mars Hill, and all report a nice time. Especially did every one enjoy the ball game, as it was our own team and Mars Hill that played the game, or at least played part of it. At the last half of the eighth inning some confusion arose and the game was called. At this time the score was 1 and 1. Our team agreed and were more than anxious to finish the game with an umpire of their own community, and the father of one of their players, also the manager of the team, Mr. Abbott, was chosen umpire, but Mars Hill refused to finish the game.

Now, we Providence players cordially invite you players to our grounds for a double-headed game on Saturday, August 3, and guarantee we will play a fair and square game. More will be said about the game next week.

PROVIDENCE PLAYER.

NOTICE TO PETITION TO SELL LAND TO PAY DEBTS.

State of Alabama, | Probate Court.
Chilton County. | July 17th, 1912.

To J. T. Green, of Bowdon, in the State of Georgia:

Whereas, W. R. K. Stanford, Administrator of the Estate of Elisha H. Green deceased, has filed his petition in writing under oath in said Court, for an order to sell certain lands belonging to said Estate, described in said petition, for paying the debts due by said Estate, upon the ground that the personal property of said Estate is insufficient for the payment of the debts, and the 19th day of August, 1912, has been appointed for the hearing of said petition:

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to appear before the said Court on said day to contest said petition if you think proper.

Witness my hand, this 17th day of July, 1912.

E. B. DEASON,
Judge of Pr. Court.

HAMPTON SCHOOL HOUSE.

Editor Union-Banner:

Crops are very good in this part of the country. We have been needing rain through here, and we were glad to see the nice shower last Sunday afternoon.

Prof. B. F. Boeckholdt has gone to Prattville this week to stand the teachers' examination.

Miss Ellen Rawlinson of Pletcher is visiting her sister, Mrs. Hooper, this week.

Mr. Arthur Hooper visited relatives near Pletcher last Sunday.

On account of the rain last Sunday afternoon, Rev. C. H. Rogers failed to fill his appointment, but will be here next time, which is the second Sunday afternoon in August. Everybody come out to hear him.

What has become of "Many Thanks"? Why don't they write again?

Miss Geneva Barbour visited Miss Bessie Lee Carwile Tuesday afternoon.

"Some folks" looked sad last Sunday. Was it because it rained so much?

Misses Geneva and Jennie Barbour and Bessie Carwile were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Davis Thursday night.

A large crowd from this place are planning to attend the ball game Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Williams of Clanton visited relatives at this place recently.

The Professor looks pleasing as a basket of chips these days.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones of Prattville are visiting their son and daughter near here.

Mr. J. D. Deramus made a trip to Verbena recently.

Mrs. Menoun and Miss Essie Burmaster were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Driver Sunday.

Mr. J. L. Cox has returned from a visit to his sister in Birmingham.

The Rev. Mr. Patrick and his girl, Miss Jennie Durden looked O. K. at White Pond last first Sunday.

A lot of us are going to attend the singing at Bethany on fourth Sunday.

INSTRUCTIONS TO GAME WARDENS

SEASON FOR DOVES OPENS ON AUGUST 1—DOVE BAITING SHOULD BE SUPPRESSED.

LETTER FROM MR. WALLACE

Calls Attention to Various Provisions of the State Laws for Protection of Fish and Game.

Montgomery.—State Game and Fish Commissioner John H. Wallace, Jr., has addressed a communication of special instructions to all of the game and fish wardens of the state, directing their attention to the fact that the season on doves opens August 1, and calling on them to suppress all infractions of the game and fish laws occasioned by persons shooting doves out of season or baiting them, also hunting without licenses and exceeding the bag limit of 25 birds for each day. Mr. Wallace terms dove baiting as a relic of barbarism and a pernicious practice that should be suppressed.

The special attention of all game and fish wardens is directed to the fact that the season on doves opens on August 1. All officers charged with the enforcement of the provisions of the statutes for the protection of birds and game should exercise especial vigilance, during the closing days of July, in order to apprehend any person who may attempt to shoot doves before the time expires when this can be done legally.

Wardens are urged to demonstrate particular activity in bringing to the bar of justice those who may violate the law by resorting to the pernicious practice of baiting fields for doves. This custom is clearly a relic of barbarism.

See to it that no one hunts or pursues any of the game birds or animals of this state without first having taken out a hunter's license as required by law; that no game is transported on any of the common carriers of the state by any person not having in his possession a hunter's license, duly issued to him; that no squirrels are shot during the close season, which does not expire until October 1; that the bag limit of 25 birds per day for each hunter is not violated. * * *

See to it that all persons taking fish by the use of seines, trammel nets or gill nets be prosecuted; that any person fishing without written permission in private ponds or lakes, wholly on the lands of another, be brought to justice; that the murderous dynamiter of fish be made to pay the penalty of his crime for employing in the waters of this state this powerful, death dealing explosive which works havoc against the rights of the people at large, in the fish of our streams and lakes. * * *

The natural resources of a state do not belong to individuals, but to the race, and this matchless asset should be protected from the vandalization of those who seek to destroy merely for the purpose of satisfying their perverted and rapacious appetite to kill.

BOOKS IN GOOD CONDITION.

Few Discrepancies Found by Examiner Evans in Tuscaloosa.

Montgomery.—State Examiner of Public Accounts Frank V. Evans filed with Governor O'Neal a copy of his report submitted to Judge H. B. Foster of the Tuscaloosa county court on his examination of the books, accounts and vouchers of officials of that county. According to the examiner, few discrepancies were found, all of the errors being of a minor nature, and promptly settled as soon as attention was called to them.

In his report on his examination of the books of R. K. Bell, tax assessor for the years 1910 and 1911, the examiner shows that for the past year the valuation of land in Tuscaloosa county was $3,688,843; valuation of city property, $2,767,030; personal property $5,249,868.

The books of Tax Collector S. D. McGee, for the years 1909, 1910 and 1911, were declared to be models of excellence, and the examiner also praised the books of Superintendent of Education P. B. Hughes.

Dr. Miller Pension Examiner.

Montgomery.—Dr. E. C. Miller has been appointed pension examiner of Shelby county by Governor O'Neal. His home is at Columbiana.

Decatur.—Articles of incorporation for the Norwood Construction company of Hartselle were filed in the office of the probate judge here. The company has a capital of $10,000, all paid in.

Anniston.—While his family was away spending the night at a neighbor's home, George Stone, who lives on Fourteenth street, beyond the old Woodstock furnace, was murdered. The back of his head was crushed in with an axe. Further particulars are not available.

BOARD OF REVENUE.

Tax Commission to Set Aside Rulings of That Body in Jefferson.

Montgomery.—Declaring that it has been reported to him that the board of revenue of Jefferson county has failed to "administer fairly and justly the tax laws of the state," in that the board has failed and refused to increase assessments on certain property, which was shown to have been undervalued, Governor O'Neal has written a letter to J. Lee Long, chairman of the state tax commission, directing him to set aside the judgments of the board of revenue of that county and to fix such regulations as the evidence may justify.

In his letter to Chairman Long, the governor does not mince matters. He declares that such actions by the board of revenue as have been reported to him cannot go unchallenged, and that it is his duty, as the head of the taxing power of the tsate, to use every legal means to secure an enforcement of the tax laws of the state.

The governor refers in his letter to Chairman Lee Long to an opinion of the attorney general in which the latter expresses the belief that the tax commission has the power to set aside any undervaluations of the board of revenue.

MUST ATTEND INSTITUTE.

Willingham States Some Teachers Have Shown Disposition to Ignore Law.

Montgomery.—Before starting work at the beginning of the next school session the public school teachers of the state will be required to do two things.

First, they will be required to show to the county superintendent of education, or to the county board, their certificate to teach.

Second, they will be required to show a certificate setting forth that they attend a teachers' institutie during the summer months. If they have no credentials to the effect that they have attended one of the county institutes, they must produce a written excuse, signed by the county superintendent of education and by the chairman of the county board. In the absence of either of these, they must produce a life certificate to teach in the public schools of the state.

Superintendent of Education Henry J. Willingham is authority for the statement that these two certificates must be produced.

Superintendent Willingham declares that it has been called to his attention that a number of the teachers are not attending the institutes.

STATE AGENTS RETURN.

Institute at Dothan Was Attended by 500 Farmers.

Montgomery.—B. L. Moss, State agent of the farm demonstration work, and District Agents Jesse M. Jones and A. D. Whitehead, have returned from the southeastern part of the State, where they spent the past week atending the big farmer's Institute at Dothan and visiting demonstration farms in that setcion and in Pike County.

They report the Southeast Alabama Farmers' Institute as having been a great success, being attended by from 300 to 500 farmers each day from three or four counties tributary to Dothan. This institute is held annually by a local institute society composed of farmers of that section, and each institute goes to the town in that territory that contributes funds for advertising and securing speakers.

In his field notes, Mr. Moss reports that at Dothan, the committee in charge has succeeded in raising 90,000 for building a packing plant, and it is proposed to start actively now to raising the $150,000 remaining required to erect the plant. The business men of that section seem to feel certain that it will be built and that it will prove the best possible step that can be taken to prepare southeast Alabama for the coming of the boll weevil, which is regarded as inevitable.

Partly Filled Cans Are "Adulterated."

Montgomery.—A recent decision of the board of food and drug inspection is of interest to canners of Alabama. The cans must be full, containing as much as the size of the can would indicate. The cans cannot be filled with water, brine or juice above that required by proper methods of canning.

For instance, no more juice is permitted to go into tomato cans than the tomatoes themselves have produced. In the case of peas, it is required that cans be filled and then only enough water put in to fill the interstices. Pulp cores and other waste are not permitted in canned tomatoes nor in other canned products.

Fayette.—The Fayette Cooperage company has a part of its machinery installed. When the plant is completed it will be modern in every respect and will have a capacity of three cars of material per week.

Tuscaloosa.—While the cotton crop of Tuscaloosa county is about three weeks later than it was last year, it is in good condition. The plants are fruiting rapidly, and the average number of bolls to the stalk is better than usual.

84 PERSONS ARE SLAIN BY REBELS

BOMBS AND BULLETS USED

Mexico City.—Eighty-four persons are dead and many more wounded as a result of an attack by Zapatistas on a passenger train between here and Cuernavaca, Moreles. The relief train brought back only eleven passengers. A military escort of fifty men, under the command of a captain and two lieutenants was aboard.

At kilometer 67, a short distance beyond the station of Parras, on the edge of the Federal district a mine exploded, overturning the engine. At that instant 500 revolutionists opened fire on the second class car, in which the escort was traveling. The soldiers left the car and fought in the open. All of them, including the officers, were killed, with the exception of five badly wounded and two who escaped injury.

Thirty passengers in the second class coach were killed, and many more wounded. In the first class coach no one was killed.

After sacking the express and baggage cars, the rebels poured oil on the cars, and, putting the bodies of the dead in them, set fire to the train. When the relief train arrived there was nothing but debris and a few passengers and wounded to tell the tale.

The train between Matamoras and Puebla, in the state of Puebla, was fired upon, and windows in the cars shattered, but so far as is known no one was injured.

Capt. Rosendo Nunez, in charge of the escort on the ill-fated train, is said to have fought heroically. After nearly every man of his command had been either killed or wounded and he himself had received three wounds, he continued to fire from a platform of a coach until a fourth bullet pierced his heart.

Among the first to fall was the 10-year-old daughter of Captain Nunez, who was accompanying her father on the fatal trip. She was sitting near a window and the first volley from the attacking band literally riddled the child with bullets.

"We had no chance," said one of the soldiers. From the time the train stopped until after it ended, there was a veritable rain of bullets. At least 500 rifles were in the first volley and the car in which we were traveling was the target. Most of the bullets came through the roof. The second lieutenant, who was within six feet of me, had 18 bullets through his body and never knew what struck him.

GENERAL GOMEZ ARRESTED

Plot Against Madero Is Nipped in the Bud at San Antonio.

San Antonio, Texas.—Emilio Vasqoez Gomez, minister of the interior in the Diaz cabinet in Mexico, and for a week provisional president of the Orozco Revolutionary party, was arrested by United States secret service officers.

Simultaneously with the capture of Gomez, Francisco Guzman, private secretary of Gomez, and Dr. P. Rueda were taken into custody on the street, and Francisco Perez and Felipe Mivannon, identified with the Gomez revolutionary faction, were taken from a Southern Pacific train which they had boarded for El Paso.

For days the United States authorities have known of a new revolutionary plot forming here and to have its base of operations in the states of Nuevo Leon and Coahuila, Mexico, across the Texas border. Large quantities of arms and ammunition are known to have been shipped through here from St. Louis, Kansas City and New Orleans, some of it going to El Paso, but the larger portion to Laredo, Texas. From Laredo this war material gradually disappeared, and is now known to have been smuggled across the Rio Grande river into Mexico.

Washington. — One hundred and twenty million dollars were filched from the American people during the last fiscal year by swindlers who operated largely through the United States mails, according to a report to Postmaster General Hitchcock. This was an increase of approximately $50,000,000 over the previous year. Of those who are alleged to have operated the fraudulent schemes, 1,043 were arraigned by postoffice inspectors. They included persons in all walks of life—merchants and mechanics.

Deaths Caused by Bubonic Plague.

San Juan, P. R.—Three deaths occurred in the suburbs of San Juan from bubonic plague. One subject has been found. These cases were not reported to the authorities. Since the outbreak of the plague there have been 37 cases and 24 deaths throughout Porto Rico. The Haffkine vaccine has been administered to all persons residing in the infected districts. The plagues of Cataiba and Dorado, a short distance from San Juan, have been quarantined.

UNCLE SAM POOR BUILDER

EXTRAVAGANCE, WASTE AND POSSIBILITIES OF FRAUD ARE POINTED OUT.

Recommended That Buildings Be Standardized and Draughtsmen Be Done Away With.

Washington.—Severe criticism of government methods of erecting public buildings is contained in the reports of the house committee on expenditures in public buildings submitted to the house. The committee points out extravagance and waste and possibilities of fraud in public expenditures after making it clear its investigations were made with no desire to discover any scandal in the public service.

The committee makes the recommendation that government buildings be standardized and endeavors to put out what it considers the folly of maintaining a big force of draughtsmen and architects to make plans for every building constructed by the government. The report finds that since 1902, 721 buildings have been erected and that there are pending bills for 750 more at a proposed aggregate cost of $70,000,000.

"If this keeps up," the committee says, "there will be 1,520 public buildings inside of fifteen years." The cost of maintenance alone will be $11,000,000 annually.

The committee says the present system of awards is bad and should be changed. It points to instances where contractors have been the beneficiaries of "extras and betterments." Without making any charges the committee says:

"Under the present method of awarding contracts for the construction of public buildings there is an open door for the grossest kind of fraud."

AGREE ON PARCELS POST

Committee Decides on Modification of Zone System.

Washington.—The full details of the parcels post provision have finally been agreed upon by the senate committee on postoffice and postroads, settling this long and heated controversy over this subject.

The compromise agreement is based on the zone system. The plan is a departure from the established system of a uniform rate of postage regardless of distance traveled, for the rate is increased as the distance the package must be transported is increased. The highest rate on domestic parcels, however, will not exceed the international postal rate of 12 cents a pound or $1.32 for a 11-pound package which is the limit.

First, length 50 miles, rate 5 cents for the first pound, 3 cents for each additional pound; second, length 150 miles, rate 6 cents and 4 cents; third, length 300 miles, rate 7 and 5 cents; fourth, length 600 miles, rate 8 and 6 cents; fifth, length 1,000 miles, rate 9 and 7 cents; sixth, length 1,400 miles, rate 10 and 9 cents; seventh, length 1,800 miles, rate 11 and 10 cents; eighth, length over 1,800 miles, rate 12 cents per pound straight. Maximum packages, 11 pounds.

Fight Pictures Under Ban.

Washington.—Prize fight moving pictures became a thing of the past in the United States when the house passed a senate bill prohibiting the transportation of such moving picture films between the various states and territories or from foreign countries. Heavy fines for violation of the proposed law are fixed by the bill. Southern members of congress were especially interested in the proposed law because of the race feeling stirred up by the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson moving pictures

Papers in Coal Deal Went Down.

Pittsburg.—When Charles M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk railroad, perished in the Titanic disaster he took into the sea with him signed contracts closing a deal for $6,000 acres of coal in Belmont county, Ohio. The deal involved the payment of $10,000,000 to a syndicate of Pittsburg men who held options on the property. The directors authorized Mr. Hays to close the deal and the necessary papers were signed. These were in Hays' pocket when the Titanic went down.

Opportunity is life's greatest asset.

Most of our troubles never happen.

The desire to be gives the power to do.

Usually the lion in the way is plaster.

Lose your nerve, and it is "never" for you.

Men are only boys a little larger and sometimes gray.

Finish the job; the unfinished job will "do" its doer.

A man never improves his time by tinkering at his own watch.

Sand on the farm is not so serious as lack of sand in the farmer.

It is no more blessed to give a bribe than it is to receive one.

It doesn't always do to put the brand of truth on with a hot iron.

The hay mow is a poor ventilating shaft. It makes the hay taste bad.

That an engine can run on gas is no sign that a man can do the same.

The size of the farm is not nearly so important as the size of the farmer.

When eggs are sold "loss off" the nest egg will not so often find its way into the market basket.

Don't be chesty because you are wiser than the pig; remember that he has a hogshead of brains.

It isn't the man with the best chance, but the one with the most push, who comes out on top.

The man who always has his work right up to date may not be the hardest worker in the community, but he is pretty likely to be the best planner.

If a boy imagines that education will enable him to live without work he is sadly mistaken. It will only enable him to work to better advantage.

What does a farmer mean who moves to town? The farm is the best place to live and there is no better place to die. Retiring to town is unnecessary.

Do not forget to study the problems that present themselves to you just because work in the field is demanding more time. There is a splendid opportunity to think and work at the same time.

TO REDUCE COST OF LIVING

Plan to Be Inaugurated in the State of Wisconsin of Immense Value to the Working Man.

The state of Wisconsin is in a fair way to inaugurate a comprehensive plan of co-operative buying and selling, which will prove undoubtedly of immense value as a future guide to the workingmen of America, and which indirectly will reduce the high cost of living. The system will be based on the working of the original Rochdale Pioneer stores in England, which, in the past 70 years, have spread over the whole country and met with unprecedented success. These workingmen of Rochdale, in 1844, pooled their meager capital amounting altogether to $140, purchased articles of daily consumption on favorable terms, and by means of a small store distributed the goods to their members at the ordinary market price. The capital bore a fixed rate of interest, and all profits, over and above this interest, were divided according to the amount of purchases made by each member. When the idea was extended, membership was constituted by taking shares, and each member, male or female, had a vote, says a Madison (Wis.) dispatch to the Chicago Inter Ocean. No credit was given or asked. Many subsidiary features of great advantage to the members are in successful operation in England for the encouragement of thrift and profitable investment. Last year the co-operative societies of England did a business of more than $565,000,000, and the profits were more than $55,000,000.

Co-operative buying and selling of necessaries is not new to America, though, unfortunately, such early attempts at establishing such a system proved entirely unsuccessful, mainly owing to the lack of business experience in the projectors, and to the fact that their schemes were too ambitious for the amount of capital available. During the last 40 or 70 years, numerous plans were launched, notably by the New England Protective union, the Patrons of Husbandry and the Sovereigns of Industry. Large co-operative stores were opened in the big cities, all based on the Rochdale plan. The weakness of their founders was that they did not begin at the bottom, and learn experience with the development of the business.

Co-operation has worked incalculable benefit in England, and should be acclimatized in America. Several associations are working successfully in this country, notably in Chicago. The present Wisconsin experiment appears to be starting well and bears the earmarks of success.

WHAT CO-OPERATION WILL DO

Co-operative marketing is now far beyond the experimental stage and is now universally recognized and successfully practised in the fruit, vegetable and dairy sections of the United States. Co-operation is found to be superior in every way to independent individual sales or purchases.

Co-operation enables the producer to furnish more uniform grades to the market, establishes uniform system of packing, and enables the members to buy feed, groceries, seeds, packages, etc., at wholesale prices.

Co-operation makes possible cheaper transportation on produce shipped to market, and cheaper rates of transportation as well on groceries, supplies, etc., needed by the producer.

Co-operation is also most effective in the opportunity it affords for interchange of ideas and experiences between members.

Co-operation eliminates the undesirable varieties of fruits, vegetables and other products, and improves the system of cultivation.

Co-operation improves the efficiency and character of the members, and the unreliable man who is a menace to honorable business transactions is influenced to change his methods or get out of the business.

In the organization of a co-operative association of producers of farm products, the leader of the movement will do well to first present the dollar or money making side of the proposition, says a writer in the Illinois Farm Home. In order to do this he should acquaint himself thoroughly with the methods of successful organizations and first follow tried and approved practice.

After presenting the benefits that have followed co-operation he should not attempt to force his would-be associates into the organization, but show that it is greatly to the benefit of each to join his neighbors in a line of good business practice that will make money for all.

The leader will always avoid the chronic kicker at least for the first year. It is better to have seven earnest, loyal men who are deeply interested in the proposition than a larger number who may not all be good pullers. One or two kickers will greatly hinder the growth of a very useful organization at the start, that would otherwise prosper and more than meet the expectations of the promoters. The organization should consist of a president, secretary and treasurer, with three additional members to constitute the board of directors. Two members of the board of directors should be elected each year to serve three years. The officers should be confined to the directors and elected for one year.

The manager should be elected annually, and not be a member of the board of directors.

On the manager largely rests the success of the association, and for this reason the greatest care should be taken in his selection. He should be a man with demonstrated ability, and a man in whose honesty the members have the fullest confidence. His tact and ability to secure the hearty co-operation and friendship of his associates will be the measure of his success.

On the commission basis the manager will receive on a short crop remuneration in proportion to his sales, and with a large amount of produce to sell he will receive the larger compensation that he earns for the additional work.

The farmers in every county in the United States will make money by co-operative organizations that when properly conducted will insure better prices on all sales and effect a large saving in purchases.

Muscovy Ducks.

The old idea that these birds are objectionable for table use on account of their musky smell is erroneous. The idea originated in the minds of the credulous who believed the word Muscovy meant musky. Muscovy is a misnomer, as these birds came from Brazil, not Russia, and are really Brazilian ducks. Muscovys do not quack and can be kept with chickens, as they don't dirty the drinking water. They roost on perches with chickens. Although of a quiet disposition they are great fliers. As layers, they are commendable. The incubation period is thirty-five days. Being natives of a warm climate, they don't stand severe cold weather like other domestic breeds of ducks, as their feet are easily frozen. As table fowls they are not equaled by any of the duck family.

Fine Asparagus.

A producer of unusually large asparagus conceived the idea of tying in huge bunches. By actual measurement one of these bunches was 21 inches long and 40 inches in circumference. Three of these had been sold to a New York hotel for $15 and others had been sold for $10 each. The most perfect conditions are required to produce asparagus of this class. Most of the stalks were an inch or more in diameter.

With much pleasure The Union-Banner welcomes the Sunday School Convention to Clanton. Among the many conflicting interests which surround us, the convention of Sunday School workerse and adherents stands pre-eminently in the foreground for the better advacement our citizens, our civilization and our country. May God's blessings rest upon their deliberations.

The nomination for Congress tendered to Judge Reynolds is still under consideration by that gentleman, who, realizing the importance of the occasion, is giving it calm and careful thought. Not alone as it concerns his personal desires, but as it affects the entire community, is the Judge giving his best thought to determine his course. If he concludes that the best interests of the district demand his acceptance, none will doubt it will be forthcoming even at the sacrifice of his own affairs. We await, with interest, Judge Reynolds' decision.

The Shelby County Fair opens part of its premium list and Chilton and Bibb Counties will have an opportunity to compete with Shelby County in all live stock and on corn, cotton and forage crops at the Shelby County Fair to be held at Montevallo, Oct. 16 17, 18 and 19th. In all, something over $400.00 is offered in prizes open to farmers in Chilton and Bibb.

This action was taken on the suggestion of a number of Shelby county farmers who wanted to see what the farmers of Chilton and Bibb could show. Of course they are not expecting any blue ribbons to go out of Shelby county, because they think old Shelby can win out on everything shown.

Among the premiums offered are the following:

Best display of cotton, $15.00 first, $5.00 second. Best display of corn, $15.00 first, $5.00 second. Best display of forage crops $15 first, $5.00 second. Best exhibit by any Farmers' Union Local $15.00 first, $5.00 second. The total amount of premiums offered by the Shelby County Fair is $1800.00.

The Alabama Good Roads Association has inaugurated and designated August 14, 15 and 16 as Good Roads Days. The object is to have all the people subject to road duty to work the roads simultaneously all over the State on these days. Also to secure the co-operation of the property owners and have them furnish teams and labor and see that the public roads through their property are worked on these days.

KITES TO CARRY AIR SCOUTS

French Military Man Has Devised a Scheme Which Authorities View With Favor.

While the enthusiastic airmen have succeeded in putting France far ahead of all other countries in the way of military aeronautics, one captain, Saconney by name, has been doggedly working over man-carrying kites, of which so much was once expected, but which have been put in the shade by the more showily performing aeroplanes.

A short time ago he made an ascension out at sea, carried up by a series of kites that were towed by a man of war. He claims that it is a simple matter to make observations and that it is much easier to regain the ship than if he tried to come down from an excursion by aeroplane.

His latest adaptation, and one that has made military authorities take notice, is a combination of automobile and kite.

His outfit consists of an automobile with a windlass that is operated by the motor, a trailing truck carrying the kites folded up and a squad of 20 men. The train can attain a speed of about 16 miles an hour.

The speed of the motor to some extent makes up for lack of wind, and ascensions are safe where they would be dangerous under ordinary conditions. The big kites make reconnoitering easier than from an aeroplane, and the apparatus is much handier to put together.

LIKES OLD-FASHIONED HOUSE

Belgian Consul at Boston Refuses to Make Changes in His Picturesque Abode.

E. S. Mansfield, the Belgian consul, has an old-fashioned house which has existed for at least a hundred years, and which he has refused to have fitted either with gas or electricity.

It is like a breath of another century, says the friends who visit it, but they admire even more the rare and ancient garden which leads from it. In itself the garden is complete and after the style of the early European gardens or America's colonial ones. The old paintings which hang in the house always evoke the most praise of all. They are Spanish, Dutch, Flemish, Italian, French and English works, and they add to the aged aspect of the home.

Whenever guests who know the modern activity of Mr. Mansfield first become acquainted with his house, they are surprised that it should appear so opposite to the owner. They ask Mr. Mansfield of it and he answers: "I like the contrast."—Boston Traveler.

Pigeon Brought Luck.

It is one of the pet beliefs of the fishing fleet folk that when a white bird flies aboard a ship at sea good luck is bound to follow. And if a white bird happens to fly aboard a brand-new craft it insures the vessel with all kinds of joy forever. Out on Georges, recently, a little pigeon fluttered down on the deck of the good ship Mary, perching on the wheel box. Result, good luck. Although Captain Whalen's boat struck mighty hard weather it came through without a scratch and landed 130,000 pounds of fish, mostly hake and cusk, which is pretty nearly the record catch for a maiden trip. The pigeon looked as if it had had some pretty hard luck itself before it fell in with the Mary, however. One of its wings was badly torn, as if a gull or a hawk had taken a piece out of it. The men aboard took good care of the pigeon, giving it plenty of food, although they made no attempt to confine it to any one part of the vessel. The bird made friends with every one, especially the cook, and refused to eat except out of the men's hands. As the Mary came up the harbor the bird was adeck. Abreast of Governor's island he suddenly took wing and flew away. The men said it looked to them as if the bird had recognized his surroundings in the inner harbor and had flown for home.

When Fish Go to Bed.

Did you know that fish go to bed in the winter? Prof. Dyche, state fish and game warden for Kansas, says: "Sure thing, fish have beds. I have seen them piled up four and five fish deep for a space at least 3 by 10 feet. Usually they find a place below a log or some kind of an obstruction in a stream where there is an eddy. They can maintain their positions there without much effort. I don't know whether they sleep or not, but fish will spend most of a winter in that way.

"When the water gets extremely cold the fish become sluggish. They can move around a little, but they lose all their alertness. They can even be caught by hand. All you need to do is to cut a hole in the ice after it has been frozen over for some time. Some fish will come to the hole for air. It is an easy matter to slip your hand under the fish slowly and you may lift him clear of the water before he makes a wiggle.

Bishop Blames His Hair.

Father William J. Dalton of the Annunciation church tells this story of a Catholic bishop well known in this locality, but at Father Dalton's request, nameless here:

"The bishop is a large man with bushy back hair," the priest relates. "He often on his tours through Kansas wears a silk hat. His crosier he carried in a large leather case.

"Recently in a jerkwater Kansas town where silk hats are scarce except on the heads of traveling musicians, the bishop was just alighting from his train when the negro porter appeared at the car door waving his crosier case.

"'Hey, boss!' the porter called. 'I reckon you all had better take yo fiddle wiz you. De company is not 'sponsible fo' packages left in de seats.'"—Kansas City Journal.

CANTANKEROUS TO THE LAST

"Uncle Jake" was one of the characters of Bunbury. He was as deaf as a post—when he wanted to be—and as contrary as a bundle of sticks.

One of his neighbors came into his yard one day and said, "Uncle Jake, I'd like to borrow your wagon this morning; mine is having a spring mended."

"You'll have to speak louder," rejoined Uncle Jake. "I don't hear very well, and I don't like to lend my wagon, anyhow!"

The old man was an expert maker of axe helves—an occupation in which there is more art than the uninstructed would suppose—and these handles he left at the village store to be sold on commission.

One snowy day as Uncle Jake came stamping up the steps of the store, another old fellow who was known as Uncle Horace remarked to the men lounging about the stove:

"I'll treat the crowd if I don't make Uncle Jake agree to the first thing I say to him when he comes in."

"Don't be rash, Uncle Horace!" called out the storekeeper. "That never happened yet, and it isn't likely to."

But Uncle Horace merely grinned and picked up one of Uncle Jake's axhelves. The door opened and in came Uncle Jake.

"Jake," said Uncle Horace, running his fingers up and down the smooth wood, "this is a mighty good ax handle."

"No, it ain't," replied Uncle Jake at once. "I can't make good handles, but that one you've got is the kind people want. They don't know no better!"

Lords in the Making.

Allan Dawson, a New York editor, says he was in London when the question of making 500 new lords was agitating England, and that he happened to be in the press gallery of the house of commons when the subject was under discussion.

"It was an exciting time," said Dawson. "A list of names was under consideration. I listened until the house had disposed of three and had elected their titles. The first man decided upon was General Booth of the Salvation army. It was set forth that his title was to be Lord Saveus. The next was Mr. Patterson, the big baggage and express man of London, and his title was to be Lord Deliverus. The third was Mr. Pink, who owns the largest jam factory in England. They fixed his title as Lord Preserveus. Then I came away."—Saturday Evening Post.

PROVIDENCE.

Good for you, A. N. B., Mars Hill, in warning the liquor drinkers to leave their fluid away. It has actually got to be so that there can be no kind of gathering but what somebody brings liquor in, just a little. Nobody ever gets drunk, but enough to disgrace themselves and trouble their parents and friends. We hope they will soon see this matter in a different light and quit.

The Providence ball team visited Mars Hill for a game last Saturday afternoon. The game went nicely until the seventh inning, Providence taking the lead in the first inning and Mars Hill tied the score in the sixth. But on account of the umpire being partial to one side, where he had brothers playing, the game was stopped in the seventh inning with the score one and one.

Not much news this week. Nobody has married or run away, and as we have an uncommonly healthy community, there is no sickness to amount to anything.

Mr. and Mrs. Wash Cobb visited Birmingham the first of the week.

Frank Merchant, of near Jemison, passed through here Friday en route to Ashby.

J. D. and Marvin Lawly, of Montevallo, visited friends here Saturday; also Jack Nabors, of Montevallo, spent Saturday night with Pat Lowry.

Mrs. Laura Cooper, of Birmingham, was down to attend the Killingsworth reunion and visited at J. H. Lowry's.

There were other visitors, but we failed to get their names.

A Mr. Winston, his wife and son, spent a few days here the last of the week on their way from Florida to Arkansas. They are making the trip with a mule team. He talks very interestingly of his trip.

Every-Day Diplomacy.

Gen. Horace Porter was giving an illustration of every-day diplomacy after having compared it with world diplomacy. "We will say, for instance," he observed, "that our every-day wiseacre is introduced to a man from Iowa. He talks corn with him. He meets a man from Boston and talks beans. Should he happen to be thrown in the company of a man from Iowa and of a man from Boston, he would discuss succotash."

Loving Friends.

Never cast aside your friends, if by any possibility you can retain them. We are the weakest of spendthrifts, if we let one drop off through inattention, or let one push another away, or if we hold aloof from one through petty jealousy or heedless slight or roughness. Would you throw away a diamond because it scratched you? One good friend is not to be weighed against the jewels of earth.

For soreness of the muscles, whether induced by violent exercise or injury, there is nothing better than Chamberlain's Liniment. This Liniment also relieves rheumatic pains. For sale by Alred Drug Co.

A Safe Rule.

Tea and coffee should not be given to a child under seven, and the longer the delay the better. A good cocoa is often enjoyed, milk and water and diluted condensed milk may also be given, and, very cautiously, plain soda water. It should never be forgotten that milk is a food and not a drink, and that plenty of water flushes the kidneys. There is no reason why a healthy child should not drink when it feels thirsty.

Tonic— Alterative

What is a "tonic"? A medicine that increases the strength or the tone of the whole system. What is an "alterative"? A medicine that alters or changes unhealthy action to healthy action. Name the best "tonic and alterative"? Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the only Sarsaparilla entirely free from alcohol. Ask your doctor about it.

Bilious attacks, sick-headaches, indigestion, constipation, dizzy spells—these are some of the results of an inactive liver. Ask your doctor if he endorses Ayer's Pills in these cases. The dose is small, one pill at bedtime.

USE FOR SHOPPING GLOVES

Mr. Compton's Simpler Method at Bargain Counter Rejected With the Scorn It Deserved.

From his easy chair Mr. Compton watched his wife putting on a pair of tan gloves. "Aren't they too large for you?" he asked lazily.

"Oh, no, not for shopping gloves," said Mrs. Compton, and with her fingers off the table, she ran a scale up and down several times. "I have to be able to do that, you see," she explained.

"Do finger exercises? What for?" asked Mr. Compton.

"Those aren't finger exercises." Mrs. Compton's color deepened as, taking off the gloves, she began to smooth and stretch the fingers. "Those are—why, they're calculations, Henry. Don't you see, if I start downtown with ten dollars, and go to the silk counter and find two lovely remnants, one for three dollars and one for four and a half, I want to reckon up at once, underneath the counter, how much they'll come to, and how much I'll have left. And last week I missed a great bargain because I had on some tight gloves and I couldn't reckon. I hadn't expected to go to the sale."

"Ah," said Mr. Compton. "Why not ask the clerk to reckon it for you?"

"Henry!" cried his wife. "At a bargain counter! The clerk! Why, nobody but a man would ever think of such a thing for a minute!"—Youth's Companion.

In these days of high cost of living, a medicine that gets a man up out of bed and able to work in a few days is a valuable and welcome remedy. John Heath, Michigan Bar, Cal., had kidney and bladder trouble, was confined to his bed, unable to turn without help. "I commended using Foley Kidney Pills and can truly say I was relieved at once." His example is worth following. Upchurch Drug Company.

Woman Bootblack.

London is to have its first woman bootblack. A woman has just completed arrangements to set up a bootblacking stand at one of the busiest corners in the West End. She believes herself to be the pioneer woman bootblack in England and declares that the men in the business need not fear her competition, since she intends to devote herself exclusively to polishing the footwear of women and children.

His Sacrifice.

"I suppose, like all government officials," said the man who sneers, "you are making personal sacrifices in order to serve your country."

"Yes," replied the village postmaster; "it's pretty hard to have to keep reading addresses when I'd rather be looking at the pictures on the postcards."

A New Deal.

"If you remember, Wombat was married just a year ago."

"I remember."

"We ought to remember the anniversary in some way. Yes, just a year ago the wedding cards were out."

"Forget it. The wedding cards are being shuffled for a new deal."

GAUGING DOWNFALL OF RAIN

Scientific Instruments Have Made It a Matter of Absolute Mathematical Precision.

Few people really understand how rain is measured. We often read in the newspaper that so many inches of rain have fallen during a certain period, but it is difficult to realize what an inch of it actually means. The British Rainfall association have years' records of rainfalls in all parts of the United Kingdom. They have reports from several thousand stations, which are sent in by people who "work" the business as a kind of hobby. There are several wooden structures now in use for measuring rain, and these are known as "gauges." The most skillful is a contrivance with a funnel at the top, through which the water passes into a cup-receiver. The weight of the rain automatically works a pencil. This marks on a sheet of paper wound round a cylinder, and when it has marked in this fashion two-tenths of an inch, the cup tilts over and empties the contents. The pencil returns to its former position, and the same little device is repeated incessantly until the rain ceases to fall, while the pencil continues to register on the paper attached.

Clay Had Campaign Banners.

Jerome Carter Hosmer, president of the Dorchester (Mass.) Historical society, at the next regular meeting of that society will present a banner which was carried by the adherents of Henry Clay through the New England states at the time of Mr. Clay's candidacy for president of the United States. It is thought to be the only one in existence.

Twenty-seven states are represented, the stars encircling the portrait of Henry Clay. Within the circle are the words, "National Currency and Protection." In the four corners of the banner are the words agriculture, commerce, manufacture and encouragement. The flag is said to have been carried by enthusiastic followers of Clay in Worchester and Roxbury in 1844.

One of the Knox Knocks.

Philander C. Knox, the secretary of state, received one day in his office a bunch of high-browed newspaper correspondents. In the number was William Hoster, who stepped to the front with a copy of his paper in which was one of his dispatches under big, black headlines. The dispatch dealt with the affair of the department of state, and ran along glibly as if the writer had enjoyed the confidence of Mr. Knox regarding the whole matter.

"What do you think of this article?" asked Hoster, exhibiting no modesty as he handed the paper to the secretary of state.

"After looking this over," said Mr. Knox graciously, "I must say, Mr. Hoster, you are the nestor of Washington correspondents."

At this Hoster took on the aspect of a balloon and looked exceedingly pleased until Knox added softly:

"Mare's nester."—Popular Magazine.

Good Excuse.

It was on the sleeping-car.

"Why, the car is so stuffy," said the warbler, "I was only humming a little air—"

It was then that he was hit with a Pullman pillow, remaining unconscious for seven hours.—Harper's Weekly.

Thomas' Method.

Theodore Thomas was once asked how he managed to impart such vitality and lightness to his orchestra's playing of the Strauss waltzes. His answer was: "Have you ever noticed that I always beat the first stroke of the rhythm up instead of down? You cannot put the life and continuous motion of the dance into a piece of music if you knock the poor tune down at the beginning of every measure."

Lovers' Tokens.

Spanish lovers present their fiancees with fans on which they have written the most impassioned poetry, embroidered garters with love mottoes woven in silk, and innumerable boxes of sweets. Engagement rings are not given, the bride-elect receiving instead a gold medal, which she wears suspended from a chain round her neck.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

"Here's Yo' Guests, Old Woman!"

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nahaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Salsam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrives in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion. In a stroll Betty takes with Hannibal they meet Bess Hicks, daughter of the overseer, who warns Betty of danger and counsels her to leave Belle Plain at once. Betty, terrified, acts on Bess' advice, and on their way their carriage it stopped by Slosson, the tavern keeper, and a confederate, and Betty and Hannibal are made prisoners.

CHAPTER XIX (Continued).

As they stumbled forward through the thick obscurity he continued his personal revelations, the present enterprise having roused whatever there was of sentiment slumbering in his soul. At last they came out on a wide bayou; a white mist hung above it, and on the low shore leaf and branch were dripping with the night dews. Keeping close to the water's edge Slosson led the way to a point where a skiff was drawn up on the bank.

"Step in, ma'am," he said, when he had launched it.

"I will go no farther!" said Betty in desperation. She felt an overmastering fear, the full horror of the unknown lay hold of her, and she gave a piercing cry for help. Slosson swung about on his heel and seized her. For a moment she struggled to escape, but the man's big hand pinioned her.

"No more of that!" he warned, then as he recovered himself and laughed. "You could yell till you was black in the face, ma'am, and there'd be no one to hear you."

"Where are you taking me?" and Betty's voice faltered between the sudden sobs that choked her.

"Just across to George Hicks's."

"For what purpose?"

"You'll know in plenty of time." And Slosson leered at her through the darkness.

"Hannibal is to go with me?" asked Betty tremulously.

Betty stepped into the skiff. She felt her hopes quicken—she was thinking of Bess; whatever the girl's motives, she had wished her to escape. She would wish it now more than ever since the very thing she had striven to prevent had happened. Slosson seated himself and took up the oars, Bunker followed with Hannibal and they pushed off. No word was spoken until they disembarked on the opposite shore, when Slosson addressed Bunker.

"I reckon I can manage that young stayer; you go back after Sherrod and the nigger," he said.

He conducted his captives up the bank and they entered a clearing. Looking across this Betty saw where a cabin window framed a single square of light. They advanced toward this and presently the dark outline of the cabinet itself became distinguishable. A moment later Slosson paused, a door yielded to his hand, and Betty and the boy were thrust into the room where Murrell had held his conference with Fentress and Ware. The two women were now the only occupants, and the mother, gaunt and shapeless, turned an expressionless face on the intruders; the daughter shrank into the shadow, her burning glance fixed on Betty.

"Here's yo' guests, old lady!" said Slosson. Mrs. Hicks rose from the three-legged stool on which she had been sitting.

"Hand me the candle, Bess," she said.

At one side of the room was a steep flight of stairs which gave access to the loft overhead. Mrs. Hicks, by a gesture, signified that Betty and Hannibal were to ascend these stairs; they did so, and found themselves in a low room lighted by a pine knot which burned in a rude sconce. The only furniture was a pallet of corn husks in the corner, and a pile of sacks which evidently served as a seat. The floor was of rough boards, and the walls and ceiling were of logs. In the latter was a small square opening which was pierced by a low door. Mrs. Hicks, who had followed close at their heels, handed the candle to Betty.

"In yonder!" she said briefly, nodding toward the door.

"Wait!" cried Betty in a whisper.

"No," said the woman with an almost masculine surliness of tone. "I got nothing to say." She pushed them into the attic, and, closing the door, fastened it with a stout wooden bar.

Beyond that door, which seemed to have closed on every hope, Betty held the tallow dip aloft, and by its uncertain and flickering light surveyed her prison. The briefest glance sufficed. The room contained two shake-down beds and a stool; there was a window in the gable, but a piece of heavy plank was spiked before it.

"Miss Betty, don't you be scared," whispered Hannibal. "When the judge hears we're gone, him and Mr. Mahaffy will try to find us. They'll go right off to Belle Plain—the judge is always wanting to do that, only Mr. Mahaffy never lets him—but now he won't be able to stop him."

"Oh, Hannibal, Hannibal, what can he do there—what can any one do there?" And a dead pallor overspread the girl's face. To speak of the blind groping of her friends but served to fix the horror of their situation in her mind.

"I don't know, Miss Betty, but the judge is always thinking of things to do; seems like they was mostly things no one else would ever think of."

Betty had placed the candle on the stool and seated herself on one of the beds. There was the murmur of voices in the room below; she wondered if her fate was under consideration and what that fate was to be. Hannibal, who had been examining the window, returned to her side.

"Miss Betty, if we could just get out of this loft we could steal their skiff and row down to the river; I reckon they got just the one boat; the only way they could get to us would be to swim out, and if they done that we could pound 'em over the head with the oars—the least little thing sinks you when you're in the water." But this murderous fancy of his failed to interest Betty.

Presently they heard Sherrod and Bunker come up from the shore with George. Slosson joined them and there was a brief discussion, then an interval of silence, and the sound of voices again as the three white men moved back across the field in the direction of the bayou. There succeeded a period of utter stillness, both in the cabin and in the clearing, a somber hush that plunged Betty yet deeper in despair. Wild thoughts assailed her, thoughts against which she struggled with all the strength of her will.

In that body of sinless Hannibal was sustained by his faith in the future. He saw his guide's purpose, and philosophically accepted the mystery of their imprisonment. Instinctively he felt that Betty was in some way responsible for their plight, and he was sorry for her. He wondered what theories would offer themselves to his ingenious mind, for she sensed something of that indomitable energy which in the face of rebuffs and laughter carried him into the thick of every sensation.

At noon Mrs. Hicks, as sullen as in the morning, brought them their dinner. She had scarcely quitted the loft when a shrill whistle pierced the silence that hung above the clearing. It was twice repeated, and the two women were heard to go from the cabin. Perhaps half an hour elapsed, then a step became audible on the packed earth of the dooryard. Some one entered the room below and began to ascend the narrow stairs, and Betty's fingers closed convulsively about Hannibal's. This was neither Mrs. Hicks nor her daughter, nor Slosson with his clumsy shuffle. There was a brief pause when the landing was reached, but it was only momentary; a hand lifted the bar, the door was thrown open, and its space framed the figure of a man. It was John Murrell.

Standing there he regarded Betty in silence, but a deep-seated fire glowed in his sunken eyes. The sense of possession was raging through him, his temples throbbed, a fever stirred his blood. Love, such as it was, he undoubtedly felt for her, and even his giant project, with all its monstrous ramifications, was lost sight of for the moment. She was the inspiration for it all, the goal and reward for which he struggled.

"Betty!" the single word fell softly from his lips. He stepped into the room, closing the door as he did so.

The girl's eyes were dilating with a mute horror, for by some swift, intuitive process of the mind, which asked nothing of the logic of events, but dealt only with conclusions, Murrell stood revealed as Norton's murderer. Perhaps he read her thoughts, but he had lived in his degenerate ambitions until the common judgments or the understanding of them no longer existed for him. That Betty had loved Norton seemed inconsequential even; it was a memory to be swept away by the force of his greater passion. So he watched her smilingly, but back of the smile was the menace of unleashed impulse.

"Can't you find some word of welcome for me, Betty?" he asked at length, still softly, still with something of entreaty in his tone.

"Then it was you—not Tom—who had me brought here!" She could have thanked God had it been Tom, whose hate was not to be feared as she feared this man's love.

"Tom—no!" and Murrell laughed. "You didn't think I'd give you up? I am standing with a halter about my neck, and all for your sake—who'd risk as much for love of you?" He seemed to expand with savage pride that this was so, and took a step toward her.

"Don't come near me!" cried Betty. Her eyes blazed, and she looked at him with loathing.

"You'll learn to be kinder," he exulted. "You wouldn't see me at Belle Plain; what was left for me but to have you brought here?"

While Murrell was speaking the signal that had told of his own presence on the opposite shore of the bayou was heard again. This served to arrest his attention. A look of uncertainty passed over his face, then he made an impatient gesture as if he dismissed some thought that had forced itself upon him, and turned to Betty.

"You don't ask what my purpose is where you are concerned; you have no curiosity on that score?" She endeavored to meet his glance with a glance as resolute, then her eyes sought the boy's upturned face. "I am going to send you down river, Betty. Later I shall join you in New Orleans, and when I leave the country you shall go with me—"

"Never!" gasped Betty.

"As my wife, or however you choose to call it. I'll teach you what a man's love is like," he boasted, and extended his hand. Betty shrank from him, and his hand fell at his side. He looked at her steadily out of his deep-sunk eyes, in which blazed the fires of his passion, and as he looked, her face paled and flushed by turns. "You may learn to be kind to me, Betty," he said. "You may find it will be worth your while." Betty made no answer; she only gathered Hannibal closer to her side. "Why not accept what I have to offer, Betty?" Again he went nearer her, and again she shrank from him, but the madness of his mood was in the ascendant. He seized her and drew her to him. She struggled to free herself, but his arms tightened about her.

Too Eager.

Fred Poyner, a Chicago dentist, was recently at a banquet given by the Dental association.

He said: "On one side is the right of things and on the other the wrong; sometimes the difference between the two is slight. As the following story shows: A gypsy upon release from jail met a friend. 'What were you in for?' asked the friend.

"'I found a horse,' the gypsy replied.

"'Found a horse? Nonsense! They would never put you in jail for finding a horse.'

"'Well, but you see I found him before the owner lost him.'"

Fit Punishment.

The Wicked Soul was sitting on a hot stove, drinking molten lava and fanning himself wtih a chunk of red hot sheetiron.

"And who is that poor wretch?" asked Dante.

"That," replied Satan, "is the first man who said, 'Is it hot enough for you?'"—Milwaukee Sentinel.

TEXT WAS NEW TO HEARERS

German's Struggle With the English Language Praiseworthy, but Somewhat Mirth Provoking.

Prince Henry of Reuss, who speaks superb English, laughed good-naturedly at a dinner in New York, over the account of certain officers of the German fleet.

"One of our chaplains," said the prince, "had the hardihood to preach in English at one of your Lutheran chapels the other day. He astonished his congregation by saying, as he rose, that he would choose for his text the words:

"'And he tore his shirt.'

"A quite audible snicker went round. The chaplain noticed it, flushed and repeated the text in a louder, slower, more distinct and impressive voice:

"'And he tore his shirt.'

"The snicker became a laugh, and the pastor rose and said:

"'Our good brother is quoting, of course, the familiar words:

"'And the door is shut.'"

To Protect the Flowers.

Edelweiss and other characteristic Swiss flowers are said to be in danger of total extinction because of the craze of tourists for collecting them. Women tourists especially are always anxious to take away souvenirs in the way of a plant, and do not simply pull the flowers, but dig up the plant. It is proposed to introduce a law that will prevent the buying, selling or digging of edelweiss, fire lily, Siberian spring crocus, Alpine columbine, the Daphne, Alpine violet or other national flowers.

NEWS BREVITIES.

Kansas City.—Receivers of the Kansas City, Mexico and Orient railway, acting on the demands of the road, in the United States for an increase in wages, have refused to grant a direct increase, but promised a betterment of conditions that will result in a wage increase.

Chattanooga.—Hettie Wright, aged 7, was run over and killed by an automobile in which Dr. Willard Steele, of this city, was learning to operate the car. The child lived several hours after being injured. Eye-witnesses exonerate Dr. Steele from blame.

Topeka, Kan.—The question of whether Roosevelt or Taft presidential electors shall go on the republican ballot at the November election must be left to the voters and not taken into the courts. This was the decision of the supreme court in the mandamus suit brought by the Roosevelt adherents.

St. Louis.—W. Kavanaugh and Thomas Lovelace, president and secretary, respectively, for the Lakes to-the-Gulf Deep Waterway association, departed for Little Rock, Ark., to arrange for the convention of the association in that city in October.

San Jose, Cal.—Frank R. Brown, member of the notorious Mabray gang of swindlers arrested in this city two years ago and at liberty on bail, was found dead in his apartments. A hypodermic syringe and a few crystals of some drug were on the dresser.

Detroit, Mich.—Fire starting in the general office of the Pere Marquette railroad burned through the two upper floors of the three-story building, destroying a part of the offices and entirely consuming the record rooms in which were located many valuable papers and documents.

Cripple Creek, Col.—A break in the Western Federation of Miners between the Industrial Workers of the World faction, headed by Thomas Campbell, of Butte, Mont., and President Moyer and his supporters became pronounced. It was learned charges of treason of the federation against ten or fifteen of Campbell's followers were filed by Moyer.

St. Paul, Minn.—The body of Ransom Phelps, veteran telegraph operator, who took the first message announcing the surrender of Lee to Gran tat the close of the Civil war, was cremated at Forest cemetery, St. Paul. Phelps died at Crooked Lake, Minn., Saturday.

Liverpool.—The British Medical association has finally declared open war on David Lloyd-George, the chancellor of the exchequer, and the national insurance scheme by which 13,000,000 people are brought into a system of contributory insurance against sickness and disability.

Peking.—President Yuan Shi Kai submitted to the national assembly six nominees to complete the cabinet and three vice ministers.

Charlottetown, P. E. I.—Mrs. McGee, the wife of a farmer, near Georgetown, who had been found guilty of the murder of her five children, has made the following confession:

"I, Minnie McGee, confess to having administered the ends of matches, containing sulphur and phosphorous, to my children, in April last. I gave it to them in sugar and water. I was feeling bad at the time I did it."

Atlanta, Ga.—Eugene H. Grace, who was mysteriously shot in his home in the exclusive residence section of the city last March, and who accused his wife, Mrs. Daisy Grace, of the crime, has been summoned as a witness at his wife's trial.

Oklahoma City.—Mrs. Minnie Ralston was found dead at her home near Helena, this state. Her throat had been cut and her skull crushed.

New Orleans.—Rex, the king of the carnival, lost his oldest coachman through the death hof Phillip G. Marks, a cabman here for 50 years. For 15 of those years Marks drove the royal carriage when the Mardi Gras king made his annual entrance into the city. He had also driven plebeian as well as tinsel royalty, having been coachman for Grand Duke Alexis of Russia when the famous Romanoff visited here in 1872.

Mayfield, Ky.—Three fires, believed to have been of incendiary origin, destroyed property valued at upward of $100,000 here.

New Orleans, La.—The search for John W. Sentilla, of the Washington Sugar Company, at Cienfuegos, Cuba, instigated by the state department at Washington in response to the plea of Mrs. Sentilla, his wife of this city, has resulted in his being found in a hospital in Havana.

Kansas City, Mo.—Edith Gambill, aged 16, shot Claudius Gambill, her father, here when he broke into her residence to which he had been denied admittance. He attempted to attack his wife and daughter.

MADE BIG PROFIT FOR STATE

According to figures contained in the annual report of Dr. H. L. Barnes, superintendent of the Rhode Island state sanitorium, the earnings of the ex-patients of that institution during the year 1911 would amount to over $266,000. This is a sum three times as large as that spent each year for maintenance of the institution, including four per cent. interest and depreciation charges.

The actual earnings in 1911 of 170 ex-patients were obtained by Dr. Barnes. These ranged from $2 to $31 per week, the total earnings for the year amounting to $102,752. On this basis, Dr. Barnes computes the figures above given. He says, however: "While institutions for the cure of tuberculosis are good investments, there is good reason for thinking that institutions for the isolation of far-advances cases would be still better investments.

Out of a total of 46,450 hospital days' treatment given, 39,147, or 84 per cent., were free, the treatment costing the state on an average $200 per patient. Out of 188 free cases investigated, 56 had no families and no income on admission to the sanitorium. Out of 132 patients having homes, the number in the family averaged 5.2, and the average family earnings were $5.46. In 59 cases the families had no income, and in only five cases were there any savings, none of which amounted to as much as $100.

HOW TO TREAT PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores, the common cause of pimples, blackheads, redness and roughness, yellow, oily, mothy and other unwholesome conditions of the skin.

The Middle-Aged Woman.

Of the many ways in which the middle-aged woman may vary the effect of her afternoon gowns none is simpler than the use of a collar and cuffs of white voile edged with scalloping and embroidery in a floral design. Another change may be the frock set of white chiffon with border of black malines, and still another is the one of black net hemstitched with silver thread. Some of these collars are so long in front that they terminate only at the waist line, where they cross in surplice effect and are tucked away under the girdle. An excellent model of this sort is of light blue lawn embroidered with black dots, and a second is of white agaric trimmed with tiny folds of broadcloth, alternating with eponge.

Voice of Conscience.

A western Kentucky negro was in jail awaiting trial for stealing a calf. His wife called to see him. On her way out the jailer, whose name was Grady, hailed her.

"Mandy," he inquired, "have you got a lawyer for Jim?"

"No, sah," said his wife. "Ef Jim was guilty I'd git him a lawyer right away; but he tells me he ain't guilty, and so, of co'se, I ain't aimin' to hire none."

"Mr. Grady," came a voice from the cells above, "you tell dat nigger woman down thar to git a lawyer—and git a dam' good one, too!"—Saturday Evening Post.

Her Affections Dampened.

A little girl was playing at the table with her cup of water. Her father took the cup from her and in so doing accidentally spilled some of the water on her.

"There," she cried, as she left the table indignantly, "you wet me clear to my feelings."—Everybody's Magazine.

Obviously Unnecessary.

"Look here, Snip," said Slowpay, indignantly, to his tailor, "you haven't put any pockets in these trousers."

"No, Mr. Slowpay," said the tailor, with a high, "I judged from your account that you never had anything to put in them."

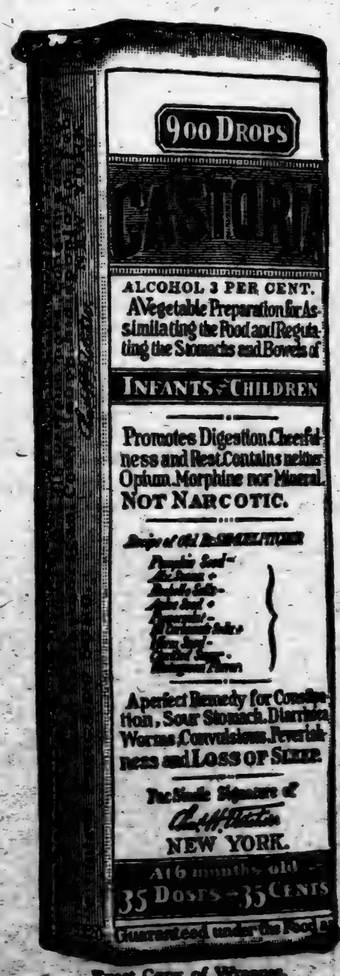
Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.



Exact Copy of Wrapper.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. A. F. Peeler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. Frederick D. Rogers, of Chicago, Ill., says: I have found Fletcher's Castoria very useful in the treatment of children's complaints.

Dr. William C. Bloomer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: In my practice I am glad to recommend your Castoria, knowing it is perfectly harmless and always satisfactory.

Dr. H. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Parrish, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. B. Elliott, of New York City, says: "Having during the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders, I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

IT IS NOT TO LAUGH AT

Playwright Has Wholesome Fear of Ridicule, Most Powerful of Intellectual Weapons.

The playwright's eleventh commandment is, "Thou shalt not get thyself laughed at." Ridicule has always been a most powerful intellectual weapon and one against which, when skilfully used, it is difficult to offer an effective defence. But the playwright's fear of getting himself laughed at is not a personal one at all. At least, it is from a purely professional point of view that ridicule appears to him most perilous.

Once I wrote a novel. I never did so much work before or since for $135.75, and yet I sometimes envy the novelist. At all events, he is master of his own pages. No cat can walk into the middle of page 163 without his consent. No blundering flyman can ruin the climax of his "big act" by lowering the curtain too soon or too late. The pet comedy scene of his book is never spoiled and blurred by the arrival in the midst of it of some bibulous party, just from a very gay dinner, falling over every one's feet on the way to their seats in the middle of a row. Fire engines never shriek past the doorway of his pages just as the hero is saying plaintively to the sympathetic heroine, "But why do I tell you all this?" Nobody in the front row ever falls in a fit and has to be carried out by the ushers right in the middle of his funniest paragraph. All his doors close when he closes them and stay closed till he opens them. His actors always say what he tells them to say.—A. L. Thomas in the New York Tribune.

TWAIN AND THE OFFICE BOY

How the Late Humorist Rebuked by His Wit an Officious Youth.

Mark Twain did not cherish a fondness for the average office boy. He had an idea that the genius was insufferable, and invariably when the humorist sallied forth into some business office there was immediate armed hostility between him and the boy.

One day Mark went to see a friend at his office, and the office boy on guard, in icy tones, said:

"Whom do you wish to see?"

Mark mentioned his friend's name.

"What do you want to see him about?" came next from the boy.

Mark Twain immediately froze up and then with a genial smile he said:

"Tell him, please, I want to ask his hand in holy matrimony."

House Cleaning Time.

Woman of the House (answering third ring)—Are you trying to pull the house down?

Book Agent—Beg pardon, madam, but have you the "Life of Grant?"

Woman—No; but if was a man I'd have yours in just about one minute. (Slams the door.)

A LIVER MEDICINE THAT BEATS CALOMEL.

Dodson's Liver Tone Does the Same Work as Calomel Without Making You Sick. It is Vegetable, Tastes Good and Never Fails.

Everybody who has ever taken Calomel knows what a strong drug it is. Calomel spurs the tired liver as if it were a tired horse, and while the liver works harder for a little while, it is soon weaker than ever.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a vegetable tonic that gently induces the most sluggish liver to work. Taking it is followed by no bad after-effects. No restriction of habit or diet necessary. For either children or grown people. The Alred Drug Company sells it.

The Upchurch Drug Co. sells a large bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for fifty cents and guarantees it to be a perfect substitute for calomel and will give you your money back if it disappoints you.

FEWER STORKS IN ALSACE

System of Registration Is Being Tried to Learn About Migratory Habits.

Every year the number of storks to be seen in Alsace becomes less. Of the four nests perched on the big chimneys on the old roofs of Strassburg, only one has been occupied this year.

In many of the villages the great migrators have ceased for a long time to relieve the landscape, and it seems only a question of time when the stork in Alsace will be a memory. Various are the causes assigned for this desertion—the draining of the marshes, the multiplication of telephone and telegraph wires and the smoke from factory chimneys.

In Germany for the better study of storks there has been created a sort of service in connection with the Education Department which tends to set up an "etat civil" for each bird, or, in other words, to register them after the manner which obtains for citizens in France.

Each bird is captured where possible and a metallic disk affixed to its leg, and German officials, wherever the birds are believed to migrate, have instructions to send to the department any information they can gather concerning storks who are German subjects. (Possibly this labeling may have something to do with the scarcity.) By this system of registration the authorities have learned something of the migratory habits of the bird; for instance, one was found dead at the Cape of Good Hope whose place of origin was eastern Prussia.

A point of interest relative to the scarcity of the stork has been brought under the notice of the German authorities by a doctor at Port Elizabeth, who suggests that they have been poisoned through eating grasshoppers or locusts which have been killed by arsenic. A correspondent, however, of an Alsace-Lorraine journal hints that the cause is to be found nearer at home.

Starving Out Troublesome Pigeons.

City hall pigeons are once more under the ban in Philadelphia, and Director Porter is the man who is trying to get rid of them. Instead of attempting to do this, as Mayor Reyburn and Director Clay did, by putting up wire screen at the entrance and turning the hose upon the pigeon roosts, the director proposes to try the starvation plan upon the flocks.

He has issued orders to the city hall guards to stop all persons from feeding the birds in the courtyard and on the northeast plaza and to arrest those who persist in throwing corn, peanuts, cakes and bread to them.

Seafaring Races.

The portraits of Captain Amundsen show a certain likeness to Dr. Nansen. Both have in a marked degree the long narrow skull of the Vikings. It is a curious circumstance that the seafaring races, whether on the Baltic or on the Mediterranean, have this type of head, while the inlanders of Europe are predominantly of the broad headed Alpine sort.

But it will hardly do to make long headedness the cause of seamanship, as some enthusiasts have done, for the Japanese, who are round headed, take readily to the sea.

The Beautiful Moonlight.

The fresh air children were camping beside a small lake in the Jersey hills. There was a full moon rising and trailing its light across the water. "Children," cried the attending social worker. "Look! See the beautiful moonlight."

"Go on," remarked a small East Sider. "That shiny wiggle out there! That's gasolene."

N. J. Gorham, Cashier Bank of Woodville, Ga. had a very severe attack of kidney trouble and the pains in his kidneys and back were terrible. The Future Woman.

"Woman is today a parasite. But the woman of the future will work."

The speaker, Lady Warwick, was narrating her views of the suffrage question to a New York reporter. She continued:

"The parasitical woman will be extinct in a generation or two. Then a certain witticism of Lord Saye and Sele's will be unintelligible.

"Lord Saye and Sele attended recently a book dinner. At this dinner everybody had to represent some book title. Well, Lord Saye and Sele just carried on his arm a petticoat.

"He was representing, you see, Kipling's 'Life's Handicap'."

Pampered Too Much.

"You are always worrying," remarked the baseball magnate.

"I have to be careful not to produce anything too heavy," explained the theatrical manager. "You know, I have to cater to the tired business man."

"I don't let the tired business man worry me. He roots with the others when he gets to the ball park."—Washington Herald.

A Converse Proposition.

"Art is the pursuit of beauty."

She smiled and added:

"And from what they tell me of the goings-on in your Great White Way here, the pursuit of beauty is also an art with some people."

PROBLEM THAT PUZZLED HIM

Bobby Didn't Understand How He Could Get Candy for Three With "One Money."

It was a charming summer morning. Bobby, aged five; Seth, aged four, and Jennie, aged three, were escorting their father, Doctor Jackson, on his daily visit to the village postoffice. He had promised them candy, and they straggled along in great content.

Opposite the telephone office the procession was suddenly brought to a stop by the operator, who appeared in the door and beckoned the doctor imperatively.

"Hey, doc! You're wanted over at Clifton right away!" he cried. "I tried to get you at the house, and your wife said you were on your way downtown. You've got to hurry!"

The doctor turned about hurriedly, but the three pleading faces made him hesitate. He thrust his hand into his pocket, found no pennies. So he selected a nickel, and placed it in Bobby's hand.

"Now, Bobby, papa must hurry. You take this and get the candy. Get some for Seth and Jennie, too, you know. And be sure to go right back home after you get it."

Bobby, who had not yet learned that there were coins of larger value than the penny, took the nickel without much enthusiasm, and the children proceeded to the candy shop. Here Bobby took his seat upon an upturned box and let his chin fall upon his breast. A telltale sob betrayed his state of mind to the clerk.

"Why, Bob," exclaimed the sympathetic clerk, "I never knew you to cry! What's the matter?"

Bobby showed the nickel that had been shut tight in his warm little fist.

"Papa told me to get candy for all of us," he gulped, "and I can't! Seth and I can't have any. I've only got"—another sob—"one money!"—Youth's Companion.

Choose Neighbors With Home.

"The subject of neighbors is one on which we are sensitive," writes Agnes Athol in an article on "Some Things That We Learned by Renting a House in the Suburbs," in which she advocates renting a house before you buy one in Suburban Life Magazine. "It is true that the people directly in our rear are charming in the social sense, but unfortunately, they spend but six months' time at home. On one side of us are some poor but honest neighbors, whose children have taught mine innumerable little phrases with which they startle us from time to time. 'My God!' and 'I ain't got no—,' and 'Come on, kids!' do not exactly appeal to me. Perhaps I am undemocratic. But even the most altruistic would have to draw the line at a family of seven diagonally across, who never miss a chance to knock the baby down or make off with unwatched toys. Our resolution to surround our own back yard (when we shall own one) with a hedge offers some remedy; but what shall we do about the neighbor on the other corner, who has a rebellious cesspool?"

Why We Are Right-Handed.

One of the professors at a well-known agricultural college has figured it out that if you are left-handed it is a sign that your ancestors were not good fighters.

"Most persons are right-handed," says he. "Only one in every twenty is left-handed. Why are people right-handed? They may have been born that way, it is true; but why?

"Away back in the beginning the chief occupation of man was fighting. In battle he carried a shield in one hand and a weapon in the other. It was not much work to carry the shield, but the quick action required by the hand and arm which did the fighting soon developed that arm. It also developed the nerves and the half of the brain that governed the right side of the body. Those who shielded their left side—thus protecting the heart—were the ones who usually came out victorious. Down through the ages this selection continued, the right hand gradually becoming more proficient."

Ventilation Test.

A single way to tell whether your room is properly ventilated is to place a wide-necked bottle of water into which you have put half an ounce of lime water, in the room, letting it remain uncovered over night. If in the morning the lime water is milk the ventilation is bad. If the lime water becomes milk on your covering the bottle mouth with your hand and shaking the vessel, the ventilation is not sufficiently good. If the lime water remains clear, the air of that room is pure.

Should Fix Their Drains.

Twenty-six states have streams which drain into the Mississippi river. If those commonwealths would set about the business of conserving their waters, the floods which are now causing so much fear in the south would not be in evidence every spring.

Narrow Escape.

An English couple had a narrow escape in the mountains above Fluelen, near Lucerne, Switzerland, recently. They lost their way, and the wife fell 150 feet on to the rocks below. Her head was severely cut but no bones were broken. Her husband fell into a tree, and was lowered into safety by peasants who came to the assistance of the pair with ropes. The couple were taken to the village of Ried, where a doctor attended them.

Stings or bites of insects that are followed by swellings, pain or itching should be treated promptly, as they are poisonous. BALLARD'S SNOW LINIMENT counteracts the poison. It is both antiseptic and healing. Price, 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle. Sold by Upchurch Drug Co.

JEMISON.

Everything very quiet. Crop prospects are fairly good. Your correspondent "Friend To All," writes interestingly and in replying to "Blue Jay," portrayed a beautiful spirit. We heartily concur with "Friend to All," that for church service there is nothing better than the grand old compositions of the Sacred Harp and Christian Harmony and when we consider what the church is, her mission, the narrow way in which she walks, her separateness from the world, how she is to strive to enter in at the straight or difficult gate, her solemn position in the world as pilgrims and strangers on the earth, having forsaken all for the Pearl of Great Price, then how much in harmony with her position are the solemn melodies of the sweet long ago. Even that great work Gospel Hymns, is unknown in the rural districts, while we know of no modern work that eclipses it. Surely the solemn position of the church does not demand music or songs that have the ring of worldliness in them. You know the world loves its own and the world does not love the solemn compositions of the past, sang by the church in her past history. Parents should teach their children those things then they will be more intelligently prepared to take their position in the church, but we fear they are not doing so. Many people are just afraid of each other. So it seems to us that "Friend to All," has the right view of matters and there are many others just pining in sadness, longing for the church to again sing the songs of yore, but doubtless they are afraid to make their desires known. They should come to the front and ask for what they want, teach their children the value of the music that has been used by the church through her past history, and by continuing earnestly to ask for what they desire they will get it.

Your correspondent attended a beautiful baptismal service at Honeycutt's mill Sunday, conducted by Mr. Carleton of Montevallo. About 15 were immersed, a large crowd attended. How full of meaning was that service? Being immersed or baptized what did it mean? That they were thus entering the church? No, they were made members of the church when they were saved. Was it indeed the great and real baptism? No.

But it was a mark showing that they had already been baptized into the Holy Spirit—the real and great baptism. Alas! how few even of ministers that comprehend its true import. Of the great number of children thus being baptized we fear that many of them will be left at the baptismal service just to drift. Oh, how truly they should be taught by parents and ministers. Yes, taught how to live separate from worldliness, to consecrate themselves wholly to their Creator, and not to some particular creed. Taught that the standard of the Bible is just as high for the young as for the old. Probably many or all of them have only been justified, they should be taught to go on to the blessed state of sanctification and thus have the life abundant for in no other way can they be happy or useful.

Yes, taught a full salvation and that such a salvation will make their lives clean and pure. Yes, taught that they can be saved from the cigarette habit and all other forms of the great tobacco sin.

Oh what a responsibility rests on parents. No Sunday School teacher can take the parent's place. Let the children have the whole truth, that they may properly prepare to meet the great upheaval and trying conditions unparalleled in the perhaps near future. Success to the cause of the people and true progress.

TEACHER'S INSTITUTE.

Enrollment of teachers has reached 102. Great interest is being manifested, and prospects are for a successful session.

Miss Sarah Luther of Troy, chief conductor, could not come before Wednesday. Prof. Shackelford took her place until she arrived.

Prof. N. R. Baker, State Supervisor of rural schools present Monday. Made several interesting and valuable talks.

State Superintendent Willingham was present Tuesday and made a number of short talks to the Institute, chief of which was one in hearty support of the bond issue for roads.

Prof. Thomas of the University was before the institute Monday night. He made a most interesting and enthusiastic address on general subjects pertaining to education.

Miss Ogburn of Montgomery, an expert in primary work in schools, has charge of the demonstration of how to conduct same in the institute.

Session of Institute to close Friday noon.

THORSBY.

Mrs. Payne from Chicago, has been visiting her sister, Mrs. S. E. Morton.

Quite a number of our town people went to Birmingham Saturday on the excursion.

Mrs. Charlie Peterson and children have just returned from the north where they have been visiting relatives and friends.

Mrs. Butler and family have returned from Shelby Springs.

W. B. Tomlin has taken charge of the store formerly owned by J. J. Lloyd.

Mrs. A. K. Horn attended the Sunday School convention held at Clanton as a delegate from the Congregational Sunday School. Rev. Butler, A. K. Horn and S. H. Herbert also attended.

We are glad to see Professor Heason about town. He makes a trip to Jemison occassionally.

Judge Reynolds and several young men visited Thorsby Saturday. The Judge and his friends are always welcome guests in our town.

Mr. E. T. Mead is doing a fine business with his cement tile. He has just purchased a mixer.

Mr. Lowerance Gerald has returned from the University at Tuscaloosa.

Excellent work is being done on the public roads between Thorsby and Jemison under the supervision of the mayor.

A fine Sunday School is in progress at Pate's Chapel, one of our Thorsby men, W. B. Tomlin, has been elected as superintendent. They have made a wise selection, more of the Thorsby people should enlist in the good work.

THE COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The annual convention of the Chilton County Sunday School Association was held in Clanton July 25th and 26th. There were present more prominent Sunday School workers from out of the county than at any convention heretofore held and it meant a great deal to the county workers to have the benefit of the broad knowledge and deep experience of these men and women from different parts of the State. Mrs. S. P. Moore of Birmingham, State Superintendent of Teacher Training; Mrs. Fred Thornton of Montgomery, who has charge of teacher training work in Montgomery county; Dr. Geo. Eaves, minister of the Congregational church in Birmingham; Mr. D. H. Marbury, the Alabama member of the Inter-national Sunday School executive committee; Mr. W. D. Dillard, Superintendent of Home Department and Mr. A. S. Scott, State Field Worker, added special interest to the sessions of the convention; while our own "home talent," Messrs. Howard Roper and W. E. Thomas and Rev. Maness were close seconds in helpful and inspirational speeches.

The reports of the county officers, the superintendents of departments and the district presidents show that the Sunday School work in our county is still prospering. The reports of four of the district president, Messrs. Thomas, Crumpton, Murphy and Mitchell were evidence of the fact that they realize the responsibility of their positions and that they are giving time and thought and labor to the welfare of their districts. We were sorry that Mr. W. J. Billingsley of District 2 and Mr. W. T. Johnson of district 5 were absent. The Jemison District No. 1 W. E. Thomas, president, made the best showing for the year. Mr. Thomas was very ably assisted by the secretary, Miss Addie Horsley who has the distinction of being the best secretary in the county, with Miss Bettie Morris Gardner of No. 5 "next best."

Especial mention is made of the work done by the following department superintendents: T. E. Williams, Teacher Training; J. A. Hunter, Adult Class; Judge L. H. Reynolds, Temperance and E. L. Thornton, Chairman of the District Conventions, visited schools, written letters, sent out leaflets, made speeches and traveled "miles and miles" by rail and over country roads in interest of their departments and while all have done exceedingly well, perhaps the prize goes to Mr. J. A. Hunter whose enthusiasm and earnest effort has trebled the number of organized classes during the year.

The gratitude of the visitors is due Rev. R. J. Mills, who left protracted services at one of his circuit churches to bid the convention welcome to the church of which he is the minister, to Mr. W. I. Mullins, who in his own distinctive and characteristic manner presented the Sunday School folk with the keys of the city and made them welcome to the capital of the county, to those citizens of Clanton who hospitably opened their homes for the entertainment of the strangers within the city gates, to Mr. J. W. Stanfield and Mr. Barney Roberts of the entertainment committee; and the county association, in all its branches and ramifications, is deeply indebted to the "Union" and the "Press" for generous space given to Sunday School affairs. The list of officers will be published later.

To J. T. Green, of Bowdon, in the State of Georgia:

Whereas, W. R. K. Stanford, Administrator of the Estate of Elisha H. Green deceased, has filed his petition in writing under oath in said Court, for an order to sell certain lands belonging to said Estate, described in said petition, for paying the debts due by said Estate, upon the ground that the personal property of said Estate is insufficient for the payment of the debts, and the 19th day of August, 1912, has been appointed for the hearing of said petition:

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to appear before the said Court on said day to contest said petition if you think proper.

Witness my hand, this 17th day of July, 1912.

E. B. DEASON,
Judge of Probate.

VALUABLE CLAY AT THORSBY.

Not all the wealth of Chilton County is above ground. Recent investigations on the farm of Miss Caroline Skinnis and adjoining property has disclosed extensive deposits of fine quality of clay. Samples have been analized at the Battle Laboratory in Montgomery, who report that it is probably best adapted for use as fire clay on account of the large percentage of silica and alumina which it contains. Another use for which it is recommended is Portland cement, while its plasticity indicates its adaptability for use in making pottery. It is also recommended as a scouring material as it is singularly free from grit. The following analysis accompanies the report:

Moisture at 212 degrees Fahr., 1.42 per cent; silica, 76.68; alumina, 13.24; oxide of iron, 3.24; calcium oxide, 0.00; oxide of magnesia, trace; oxide of potassium and sodium, 0.37; loss by ignition, 4.65.

There are also considerable areas of a pure white clay such as we judge is use for making clay pipes and many other uses that only await the coming of the men who can utilize them.

Intercity Meal Tickets.

Restaurants where the meal ticket system prevails adopt various devices to attract trade. A New York proprietor recently posted this sign above his desk:

"Meal tickets purchased here good in restaurants in Boston, Baltimore, Washington and Chicago."

Then followed the addresses of the restaurants where the meal tickets would be honored.

"No, I have no interest in those houses," the proprietor said, "but I know the owners, and we concluded that it would be a good plan to exchange tickets so that customers going from town to town could make sure of a square meal in case work was slack or they got extravagant and spent all their money."

CRAFT APPEALS FOR GOOD ROADS

URGES PEOPLE OF STATE TO OBSERVE GOOD ROADS DAYS AUG. 14, 15 AND 16.

BETTER FARMS WILL BE SEEN

Better Citizenship Will Be Alabama's Fortune With the Advent of Good Roads, Says Craft.

Mobile.—Hon. John Craft, President Alabama Good Roads Association, has sent out the following appeal to the people of Alabama, to observe Good Roads Days August 14th, 15th, and 16th:

"The Alabama Good Road Association's calls to the people of the State requesting that the 14th, 15th and 16th of August be set aside as Good Road Days, and rural consolidation.

"When the attention of the County Commissioners, the Judges of Probate and citizens of the State shall be directed to the importance of God Roads through the Alabama Good Roads Association, a patriotic body, the education of our country people will be brought to a higher standard. Then the boys and girls will remain close to the soil, and our grand State will teem with happy and prosperous farms. Then the immigration problem will be in a manner solved.

"When Good Road education shall have been instilled into the minds of every man, woman, boy and girl of the State, better farms will be seen, and better citizenship will be Alabama's fortune. Thousands of boys and girls are leaving their homes where they were born, move to cities, where they eke out a miserable existence in the overcrowded cities, and many of them are lost to society.

"The mission of the Alabama Good Road Association is to preach the gospel of Good Roads, and its religion is broad enough and liberal enough for all creeds to stand upon. I urge and appeal that the co-operation of the County Commissioners, the Judges of the Probate, the Churches, the Public Schools, other Civic Organizations, and the assistance of every man and woman of the state be given to this movement to make the Good Roads days, August 14th, 15th and 16th, a success."

PHYSICIANS TO CONVENTION.

International Congress on Hygiene To Meet in Washington.

Montgomery.—Five physicians were appointed by Governor O'Neal to act as a committee toward arousing interest in Alabama in the approaching meeting for the International Congress on Hygiene and Demography. This congress will be held in Washington September 23 to 25, and the United States government asked Governor O'Neal to co-operate in getting a good delegation from this State to the meeting.

Power of appointment will be liberal, and it is probable that the committee will ask counties and cities to name representatives. This will be a mammoth congress in which delegates from practically all civilized countries will participate. The purpose of the congress is to do all it can toward improving health conditions.

Four Paroles Granted.

Montgomery.—Four paroles were granted by Governor O'Neal. Albe Lloyd, Randolph county, convicted of grand larceny and given three years in the penitentiary was granted his freedom on account of his youth ad uncertainty of his guilt. Will Priest, of Eufaula, convicted of violating the prohibition law, and given six months in the penitentiary, was paroled on the ground that the violation was technical and that Priest had borne a good reputation previous to his conviction. He had served none of the time in the penitentiary. James Williams, convicted in Calhoun county of arson in the second degree and given two years in the penitentiary was granted an extension of 30 days on a temporary parole. The parole will expire September 1, at which time the state board of pardons will consider his application for a permanent parole. James Metcalf, of Cottonwood, Houston county, was paroled out of the boys' reform school at East Lake.

Montgomery.—Commissions were issued to the following officers of the state militia by Joseph F. Scully, adjutant general of the Alabama National Guard; William E. Sullivan, first lieutenant, Co. L, Fourth regiment, East Lake; George C. Scatser, captain quartermaster, Fourth regiment, Montgomery; Robert Joers, first lieutenant, Co. F, Fourth regiment, Phoenix City; Raves Norris, second lieutenant, Co. K, Fourth regiment, Birmingham; D. C. Dozier, second lieutenant and quartermaster, Fourth regiment, Selma.

IN NEED OF MORE REVENUE

Extra Session Will, It Is Believed, Be Called Just After Christmas.

Montgomery.—When the legislature assembles in extra session toward the end of this year or early in next year railroads, reform and revenue will largely engage the attention of the state law makers, and it is probable that these three subjects will form the nucleus around which all other legislation will center.

Each of the three subjects is probably big enough to consume the untiring attention of the members of the two houses during the entire time for which the session will be called. Since the adjournment of the last regular session of the legislature, in the spring of 1911, these subjects have been the most discussed, and it is certain that they have engaged a greater amount of attention on the part of officials and legislators than any other questions.

Insofar as legislative enactments are concerned, the state has nearly reached the limit of its power. All that remains now is for the United States supreme court to either confirm or reject the action of the legislature of 1907 in regard to the railroad legislation. By the action of the state in appealing to the highest court in the land, the question of further legislation on the subject of railroads must necessarily await the decision of that tribunal.

One of the biggest questions that will come before the legislature will be that of reform. This is considered one of Governor O'Neal's pet hobbies, though he has advocated it so strenuously that it is now no longer regarded as a hobby by serious thinking people, but as one of the livest and most pertinent questions of the day.

The most important question which the legislature will have to consider will be that of revenue. Legislators, officials and men in every walk of life in Alabama regard this as one of the most pertinent subjects of the day and it is probable that there will be hundreds of suggestions made during the session looking to an increase in the state's revenues.

Just what steps will be taken to improve the financial condition of the state is a matter purely of conjecture. Everyone has his pet theories on the subject, and there are not many who agree. Here are some of them:

An equalized system of taxation; assessment on the basis of 100 per cent rather than on a basis of 60 per cent; the feeding of county prisoners by the county rather than by the state; the cutting down of school appropriations; the abolition of useless departments and state offices.

Since the announcement of Governor O'Neal several weeks ago that he desired to put off calling the legislature together until after the next state election in November, it has been pretty generally accepted that the state solons would meet either about the middle of November, for a six weeks' session before Christmas, or immediately after the first of the year. The opinion seems to prevail that the latter time will be chosen, as it is not believed that the members of the legislature would be able to give much serious consideration to their legislative duties on the eve of the Christmas holidays.

But it is practically certain that an extra session of the legislature is not far in the future, and it is alleged that when the state law makers do assemble they will have a large volume of important and serious legislation to enact.

FARMERS' SCHOOL OPENS.

Lectures by Joe Joe Wing, Mrs. J. N. Hutt and Miss Powell Features.

Auburn.—Dr. O. A. Cary, director of the farmers' summer school which opened at Auburn August 1, and will continue in session for ten days, says indications point to the largest gathering of farmers in the history of Alabama to study agricultural problems.

A feature of the summer school will be the lectures by Joe Wing, editor of the agricultural department of the Breeders' Gazette, America's most noted speaker and writer on agricultural subjects. Another interesting feature will be the conference of Alabama farm demonstrators during the first three days of the summer school. B. L. Moss, in charge of demonstration work in Alabama, has just written Dr. Cary that practically all of his agents will be in attendance. Especial emphasis will be laid upon the lectures on home improvement, sanitation, cooking and other domestic questions.

Mrs. J. N. Hutt, of Raleigh, N. C., who gave a number of interesting lectures last year, will be present again.

Miss Susie Lee Powell, of Jackson, Miss., will give special attention to the girls' tomato and canning clubs.

Dr. Cary announces that it is probable that Dr. B. I. Galloway, chief of the bureau of plant industry, Washington, will be present and deliver one or two lectures.

Marion.—Five miles of the Marion-Uniontown highway has been surveyed and bids advertised for construction. Engineer Scales is now making the permanent survey for the first five miles out from Marion. Five miles of good roads have also been surveyed out from Scott's station and in addition thereto State Highway Engineer Keller is advertising for bids to construct four miles of road leading from Marion toward the Dahlia river at Borrough's bridge. The county will supplement this fund, making a permanent road as far as the river.

EXCISE TAX BILL PASSED IN SENATE

MEASURE INCLUDES PROVISION FOR REPEAL OF CANADIAN RECIPROCITY ACT.

THE VOTE WAS 37 TO 18

Lays Income Tax on All Persons and Co-Partnerships Doing a Yearly Business of Over $5,000.

Taxes That Must Be Paid If New Bill Becomes Law.

While the man with an income of $5,000 or under is exempt under the excise tax here are some figures that would be paid by whose income is in excess of that amount, if the bill becomes a law:

$7,500 income	$ 25
$25,000 income	200
$100,000 income	950

Washington.—The excise bill was put through the senate by a coalition of Democrats and Insurgent Republicans. It extends the provisions of the corporation tax to all persons and firms having an annual net income in excess of $5,000. The vote was 37 to 18.

This action, following the adoption of the LaFollette wool bill presages the passage of a bill sharply reducing sugar duties.

The coalition which at one time seemed to have gone to pieces and been replaced by a consolidation on the Republican side and a closing of ranks, as was disclosed in the vote on the metals bill, is again in fine working order.

The nearest approach to an income tax which the Democrats felt it was safe to pass at this time was adopted. Attached to the bill was a rider repealing the Canadian reciprocity act and another creating a tariff commission. This was the Cummins bill, which had such an eventful experience.

The estimated revenue from the tax was stated to be $60,000,000 a year, or an amount equal to that which would be forfeited by abolishing the sugar duty.

The measure was changed from the original house bill only in minor particulars, except for the adoption of the Canadian reciprocity repeal and the permanent tariff commission provisions. It will go back to the house for the approval of that body, and it is believed an agreement will soon be reached.

The excise measure would levy upon all persons, firms or copartnerships an annual tax equal to 1 per cent. of net income in excess of $5,000.

HARRY THAW STILL INSANE

Stanford White's Slayer Is Ordered Back to Matteawan.

White Plains, N. Y.—Harry K. Thaw, in the eyes of the law, is still insane and must remain in the asylum, where he was placed on February 1, 1908, after he had killed Stanford White. Justice Martin J. Keogh, of the Supreme court, denied Thaw's application for freedom. The court took the ground that Thaw's release would be dangerous to public safety.

In his opinion Justice Keogh briefly sketched the history of several efforts of Thaw to obtain discharge from the hospital. "In May, 1908," he said, "he (Thaw) obtained a writ of habeas corpus to secure his discharge on the ground that he was then sane. The question of his sanity was carefully inquired into by Mr. Justice Morschauser, who, in an able opinion, decided that he was then insane and that he would be unsafe to set him free.

"In June, 1909, another writ of habeas corpus was sued out in his behalf, an exhaustive inquiry was had into his sanity and a lucid opinion was written by Mr. Justice Mills, in which he decided that he was then insane, and that it would endanger the public peace and safety to grant his discharge."

French Market to Be Torn Down.

New Orleans.—The French market, where four generations of housewives have bargained and bought meats and vegetables, will soon have passed. The sanitarians have won in their fight for conditions that will insure purer food, and the market, part of which has stood since its first establishment in 1801, is to be replaced by a remodeled structure, with white-tiled stalls and modern screening instead of the open-to-fly booths a century old. The renovation of the market has already begun.

Hydroplane for Each Battleship.

Washington.—Each battleship of the navy will be equipped with a speedy hydroplane within the next year if later plans of the navy department materialize. Rear Admiral Phillip Andrews, acting secretary, has called upon manufacturers to notify the department not later than August 15, whether they will submit hydroplane designs to meet naval requirements. It is proposed to have the machines sustain a speed in the air of not less than fifty miles an hour, carrying two passengers.

CHARLES P. NEILL

Dr. Charles P. Neill, commissioner of labor, is known as the "strike fixer" by reason of his success in adjusting industrial troubles.

30 PERISH IN FLOODS

CLOUDBURST SENDS MILLIONS OF GALLONS OF WATER INTO PENNSYLVANIA MINE.

All Western Pennsylvania Is Devastated—There Is Ruin Everywhere.

Pittsburg.—Death and widespread devastation from tremendous rains has resulted in western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio and West Virginia. From all sections comes details telling of persons drowned or reported drowned; of hundreds of buildings wrecked or completely washed away; streets torn up and bridges swept down; crops ruined, light plants put out of commission and towns left to suffer their misery in darkness, while transportation, telegraph and telephone facilities are badly crippled.

At Evans Station, three miles north of Uniontown, Pa., a cloudburst sent waters raging into the mouth of the Superba No. 2 mines. Fourteen men were drowned like rats in a trap.

A few miles away at Lemont Mine No. 2 three other men are reported to have drowned in like fashion.

Up in the Red Stone valley near Brownsville, Pa., it is rumored that at least ten miners were caught while at work by flood waters entering the mines and drowned.

Uniontown, Pa.—Caught like rats in a trap when water rushed into the manway of Superba No. 2 mines at Evans Station, three miles north of Uniontown, following a cloudburst, thirteen men were drowned and thirty-seven escaped after a most harrowing eperience. The men were drowned about four thousand feet from the mouth of the mines, their only avenue of escape.

Although the list given out by the officials contains thirteen victims, it is reported that at least one more victim, an unknown foreigner will be added.

STORM STRIKES SAVANNAH

Lightning Starts Two Fires and Puts Cars Out of Commission.

Savannah, Ga.—Savannah was visited by a severe electrical storm that brought with it a tremendous fall of rain and during which time lightning played pranks in many parts of the city. Two fires were started by the lightning; the street car service was stopped and a great deal of inconvenience caused.

The flagpole, on top of the four-story Odd Fellows' hall, on Barnard and State streets, was struck by lightning. The large building is tenanted by a great many people, and the blinding flash of lightning and the terrific peal of thunder, accompanied by the falling pieces of pole to the earth, almost created a panic among them for a time.

At the home of Isadore Gottlieb, on Bryan and Montgomery streets, lightning struck the wires, running into the house and setting it on fire.

80 Miles an Hour for Mail Trains.

Chicago.—That mail trains frequently are compelled to run more than eight miles an hour to make the schedules demanded by the United States government, was brought out at the investigation of the recent Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad wreck at Western Springs, in which thirteen lives were lost. The Illinois railroad and warehouse commission is making the investigation. Robert Rice, superintendent of the railroad, told of having ridden more than 80 miles an hour on mail trains.

Preacher Shot Dead.

Huntington, Tenn.—Rev. W. C. Freeman, Primitive Baptist minister and storekeeper of the village of Mixie, was found dead in his storehouse, as the result of a bullet wound in his head. Whether the minister was assassinated or shot himself was not determined. A small caliber rifle was found near the body. One theory advanced, however, is that possibly the rifle was thrown near the body of the minister as a ruse by those responsible for his death. Several persons are under surveillance.

EMPEROR PASSES FROM LIFE'S STAGE

NEWS OF DEATH WAS SEVERE SHOCK TO PEOPLE, WHO ADORED RULER.

ILL FOR SEVERAL MONTHS

Death Came to the Japanese Ruler After 48 Hours of Unconsciousness.

Tokio.—Mutsuhito, for 44 years Emperor of Japan, died at 12:43 o'clock. He had been unconscious for 48 hours. Yoshito Haru-No-Miya reigns under formula provided by the constitution promulgated by Mutsuhito, "The King is dead; long live the King."

Mutsuhito, who was the one hundred and twenty-first Emperor of Japan, passed gently away. He had been unconscious for many hours prior to his death and the Empress, the crown prince and the most prominent officials of the household and government were at the bedside.

Haruko, now Dowager Empress, yields to Princess Sadako, the young Empress, who is the mother of three sons of whom the eldest is Hirohito. Haruko has won universal sympathy because of her untiring vigil in the sick room where she remained continuously for 10 days. Even on the last day she pitifully begged the physicians for a short respite for the dying Emperor.

Everything known to science was done to prolong the life of the sovereign. The whole nation watched pathetically.

The outcome was inevitable from the first acute developments July 15. Death was due to acute nephritis. This was complicated by diabetes and an intestinal affection. As is usual in such cases the patient on occasion showed marked signs of improvement followed by a relapse. Since July 25 the condition of the Emperior gradually became worse with high fever, weak and irregular pulse and shallow respiration.

Sketch of Life.

His imperial majesty, Mutsuhito was the 121st emperor of Japan. He was born at Kyoto on November 3, 1852, and was the second son of the Emperor Komei. In 1860, seven years before his father's death, he was declared heir apparent. He ascended the throne as a boy of 15, and on the occasion gave his solemn promise to grant some form of representative government. He fulfilled that promise in the most liberal manner and thus gave to his country its new birth. He is acclaimed by the entire world as the father of modern Japan.

Although Mutsuhito did not at first impress his personality upon the outside world, he did evince rare acumen in calling around him a group of the ablest men in his empire. These he called the "Elder Statesmen," and under their wise council the mikado saw his country develop into a world power almost in a night.

The two most conspicuous events of his long reign were the wars with China and Russia, both of which, as all the world knows, terminated happily for him.

The married life of the mikado was said to have been exceptionally happy. He leaves one child, a son, Prince Haru, who is an officer in the Japanese army.

This prince is not the son of the empress, but of a secondary wife, just as his father was. But to the prince the empress is his mother, and the woman who bore him is a perfect stranger.

REFUGEES POUR INTO EL PASO

Americans Frightened by Threats of Rebels to Massacre Them.

TENTS FOR REFUGEES.

Washington.—The Senate passed a joint resolution authorizing the war department to supply tents for the care of American refugees from Mexico at El Paso. Telegrams from the mayor of El Paso said that 2,500 Americans from Mexico would be in El Paso within another day and that the city had no facilities to care for them.

El Paso, Tex.—Nearly 600 American women and children, hungry and fatigued refugees from the Mormon colonies in Casas Grandes district, 75 miles south of the border, arrived here by special train. Others are expected.

That the exodus of Americans from Mexico will be thorough is evident. There are already more than 800 refugees in this city. They are from the large and three small colonies, each with almost an entire American population, Dublan, with 1,200, Juarez with 800, Diaz with 750 and the minor mountain settlements with from 250 to 300 population each.

According to conservative figures given by Mormon churchmen here more than 3,500 Americans in Mexico consider themselves in great danger.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

NELLIE GRANT WEDS AGAIN

The marriage recently of Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris to Frank H. Jones, a Chicago banker, was in sharp contrast to her first marriage, 38 years ago, to Algernon J. Sartoris, an English army officer.

Nellie Grant was then the idol of the nation and her marriage took place in the east room of the White House while her distinguished father was president. It was one of the greatest social events the White House had seen up to that time, or perhaps since. Simple, amiable and unaffected, Nellie Grant, the only daughter of General Grant, had endeared herself to the American people and she went with her husband to their English home accompanied by the heartiest good wishes.

In England she was presented to Queen Victoria and dined at Windsor Castle. Yet her life in England proved most unhappy. Her husband treated her with injustice and cruelty, so much so that her father-in-law's sympathy was aroused in her behalf and he made earnest efforts to effect a restoration of good feeling between husband and wife. Failing in this, he gave her a small London house in Cadogan place, forced his son to give her a country home near Hampton and settled a handsome income upon her. Upon his death, in 1890, he left her the town house in which she had lived after her separation from her husband and also settled upon her $35,000 a year.

Three years after the death of the elder Sartoris her husband died and Mrs. Sartorirs received the principal of his income, as guardian of her children, and the lease of the country house.

BIDDLE'S UNIQUE METHODS

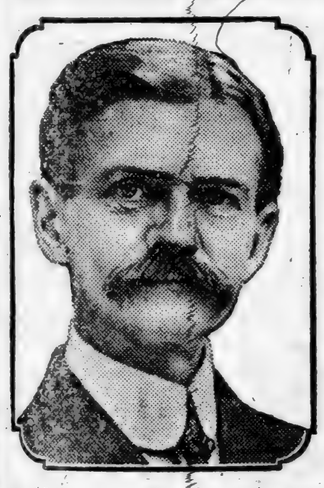
It is a far cry from prize fighting to religion. At first blush it seems most sacrilegious to associate the two subjects. But it has been done successfully not only in words but in deeds, and, as results have proven, it is the basis of one of the most remarkable religious movements this country has ever seen.

The man back of this novel idea for furthering the cause of Christianity is Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, millionaire, of Philadelphia, Pa., who but a few years back became famous as an amateur boxer and an object of criticism and source of disgust to the ultra-exclusive set of the Quaker City of which he is a member. But withal, "Tony" Biddle proved himself a practical pugilist—one who loved the manly art only for the manliness which it brought out; one who stood for honesty and high ideals and who was ever a gentleman.

When Mr. Biddle conceived the idea of his Bible class movement, his secret motive—if such it may be called—was to introduce athletics as an inducement to young men, and when he took charge of his first class in the Sunday school of Holy Trinity Protestant Episcopal church, Philadelphia, four years ago, he had but three members, and the attendance of the school was very slim at the time.

So rapidly has the Drexel Biddle Bible class grown that it now numbers 700 members, and it is the ambition of the originator to make it of national scope.

MARSHALL NEW IN POLITICS



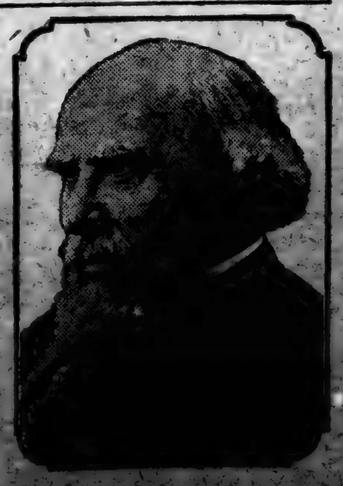
Gov. Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana, the Democratic nominee for vice-president, rode to the front of his party on a wave of reform. But the Indiana wave was not so boisterous as those that broke on the New Jersey coast and elsewhere. Governor Marshall believes in reform—in modernation. Also he believes in progressing—with moderation. He does not believe that this great and glorious commonwealth is going to the "demnition bow-wows;" in fact, he points with pride to his belief that the country is just a little bit better politically, financially and morally than ever before.

It required heroic measures on the part of his friends to induce Governor Marshall to take his presidential chances seriously, and even then he refused to allow any effort to be made in his behalf outside of Indiana.

Governor Marshall was born in Manchester, Ind., in 1854 and has spent his entire fifty-eight years in his native state. He was graduated from Wabash college in 1873, when he was twenty-one years old. He practiced law in Columbia City, Ind., until he was elected governor two years ago. He is a member of many clubs and holds LL.D. degrees from Wabash, Notre Dame and the University of Pennsylvania. He married Miss Lois I. Kimsey of Angola, Ind., in 1885.

In the Literary State they call Marshall the "Little Giant." When one sees him for the first time he wonders why, because there is nothing colossal about the slender, undersized man with sloping shoulders and quiet mien. His hair and mustache turning from gray to white, do not bristle, his brows do not "beetle" so one can notice it and even his violet-blue eyes are mild. It is only when one knows him and his political history that that "Little Giant" term is understood.

HILL'S REMARKABLE CAREER



The retirement of James J. Hill from his position as chairman of the board of directors of the Great Northern railroad, which has just become effective, was officially announced Monday from the office of the company at St. Paul.

The resignation of Mr. Hill was presented to the board of directors June 7, and unofficial reports of the changes were made at the time, but the statement with which Mr. Hill accompanies his resignation was made public only a few days ago.

Louis W. Hill, who was recently succeeded by Carl R. Gray as president of the Great Northern, succeeds his father as chairman of the board of directors. James J. Hill will remain a member of the executive committee of the board.

With his retirement Mr. Hill completed thirty-three years of active service in the northwest, beginning with his purchase of an interest in the St. Paul and Pacific, of which he was made general manager, to the time of his resignation from the office which he has held for five years, since having resigned the presidency of the Great Northern road.

James J. Hill rose from a job as a day laborer to the presidency of the Great Northern railroad. He was cut out for the pulpit, dreamed in his youth of war and literature, and when a man tripped his boyhood enemies in the passing of money. He was born [illegible]

HUGE FREAK FISH PUTS UP A FIGHT

New Jersey Fisherman Lands Queer Specimen Five Feet Long After Hard Fight.

TWO ROWS OF TEETH

The Monster That Is a Cross Between Alligator and "Jersey Devil" Will Be Sent to Smithsonian Institution to Be Identified.

Philadelphia.—Attacked by a mysterious creature, variously described as a "monstrous amphibious animal" and a "furious freak fish," Daniel Miller, a shad fisherman, was rescued from harm by his companion, Harry Taylor, in the Delaware river off Gloucester, N. J.

For five minutes after the creature had been hauled into their boat it gave battle. Until Miller became exhausted he fought the attacks with his fists. Taylor, who was operating the boat, was afraid to leave his position while the battle waged, for fear the boat would capsize.

Miller, who is one of the oldest fishermen in Gloucester, accompanied by Taylor, set out with nets for shad early this morning. Shortly before noon, when they were preparing to return home with their supply of fish, they pulled in the net.

As they brought it to the surface the weight became noticeably heavy. There was a constant jerking at the ropes. At last they were unable to pull the net any higher and lashed it to the side of the boata. When Miller opened the net the creature sprang from the water at him. The force sent Miller sprawling into the middle of the boat. The creature, which had two rows of long teeth, snapped at him viciously.

When the fishermen finally landed their "catch" on land, hundreds of persons flocked to see the creature. It was taken to Miller's boathouse. Fishermen who have seen and caught many kinds of fish shook their heads when asked what they thought the thing was.

The creature measures 5 feet 4 inches from the head to the end of the tail. The tail alone measures 3 feet. The head resembles the head of a large "snapper" and is not unlike that of an alligator. It has twenty teeth, some short and ragged, while those in the front are shaped like a dog's, long and pointed.

On its broad dgray back are scales from one to two inches in length, which overlap one another. The creature has four feet, like those of an alligator. When standing it would be about a foot from the ground. The tail, shaped like a huge cone, resembles the tail of an alligator.

A number of the oldest fishermen believed at first that the creature was a lizard more than two centuries old, while others declared that the thing answers to the description of the "Jersey devil,' which several years ago gave the entire eastern states a fright.

The thing will be kept by Mr. Miller at his bath house and placed on exhibition for a few days. In the meantime the scientific authorities at Washington have been asked to examine the creature and pass judgment as to what it may be.

Germs Busy After Thirty Years.

Rising Sun, Md.—Scarlet fever germs that had been in the house for thirty years, physicians claim, are responsible for the illness of Stanley, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Luther McCardell of New Valley. Several deaths from the disease have occurred in the house and recently when the interior of the house was altered in, the dust under the old wall paper Dr. Ernest Rowland of Liberty Grove found living fever germs.

Only Half Body Perspires.

Central Village, Conn.—An employee of one of the factories here, named Van Nessa, has furnished a puzzling problem for the doctors. The man perspires on only one side of his body, the other side being dry as a bone. Asked what he thought was the reason for this peculiar condition Van Ness said: "Well, my father was French and my mother German, and possibly the German dried up the French part of me."

ALABAMA PARAGRAPHS.

Decatur.—Fred Reisingler presented a petition to the city of Decatur asking for $10,000,000 damages fo the death of his wife.

Mr. Reisinger claims that the death of his wife was due to a fall which she received on the streets, and claims it was caused by the city allowing slinkers to accumulate on the street. Evidently Mr. Reisinger, who is a foreigner, thinks that there is no limit to the wealth of Decatur.

Brewton.—Ground was broken for the new hotel that is to be erected here. The new building will cost something like $30,000.

Gadsden.—No advance sales of cotton are being made although farmers are being offered 12 1-2 cents for deliveries to be made in November and December.

Florence.—Preparations are being made to hold the district conference of the Woman's Missionary conference of the Florence district in Florence during the second week in August.

Selma.—With all of the necessary requirements complied with and proof establishing the legality of the bond issue, the city of Selma will within the next week or so receive the money for the issue of $35,000 school bonds which was recently authorized by the voters of the city. As soon after the money is secured as possible definite arrangements for the building of the new high school building in the western part of the city will be started.

Evergreen.—I. F. Goodson, as tax commissioner of Conecuh county, has raised the valuation of property in this county to the amount of approximately one and a half million dollars. There is great complaint at the action of Mr. Goodson, and nearly all the people who are affected are earnestly protesting against the raises; but the tax commissioner says he is amply justified in what he has done, and will stand by his raise.

Gadsden.—The Albertville Fair Association has awarded a contract to local contractors for the erection of a grandstand, exhibition hall and stables at the Fair Grounds at Albertville. The building will cost about $3,000 and will be completed by September 1 and will be used by the association for the Fair that will be held in October. A race track was built this summer at a cost of about $3,000.

Jasper.—Enterprise won out after a spirited contest over Selma and Montgomery for the honor of entertaining the next state Baptist convention which has been in session here. The convention also decided to hold the next session in November instead of July, as has been the custom. The Rev. J. L. Thompson will preach the introductory sermon.

Birmingham.—The Christian Fraternal association has filed articles of incorporation in the probate office here. The association has a constitution that indicates co-operative principals and gives the right to build schools, colleges, universities and other things of that nature. It is intended to adopt rituals and to confer degrees like fraternal orders.

Mobile.—The third day's campaign to raise $10,000 to insure the location in Mobile of the $50,000 orphan asylum, which the Episcopal church in Alabama has decided to build, resulted in the collection of cash and promissory notes aggregating $2,953.50. This brings the total amount raised during the three days to $10,787.75.

Selma.—Dr. W. E. Hinds, State Entomologist, inspected a number of farms in Dallas county and examined into the army worm conditions. "I find the conditions deplorable," was a statement made by Dr. Hinds.

Anniston.—Joseph Dawson, a private in Company E, First Florida infantry, was painfully injured in the sham battle when he was shot in the right arm with the wadding from a blank cartridge.

Gadsden.—The condition of crops throughout Etowah County are much better than they were a week or ten days ago. There has been ample sunshine for the past two days and a large amount of work has been done in the fields. Grass and weeds ploved up have died immediately.

Florence.—William Richardson killed himself in East Florence by shooting himself through the head. He lived only an hour after firing the fatal shot.

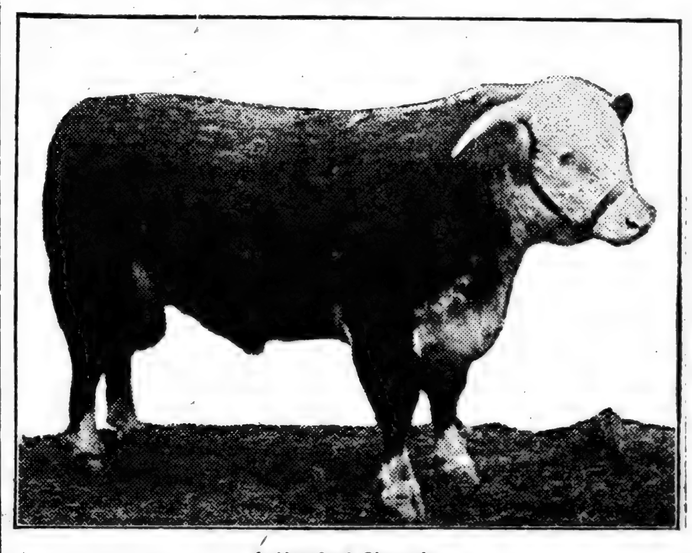
Bay Minette.—W. D. Stapleton, leading financier, announced that he would erect a large block on courthouse square in the near future.

Gadsden.—A large force of men are working on Lock 4 on the Coosa River. About 100 men have been employed steadily. The lock will be completed next year.

Dothan.—Will Halsten, who has been on trial at Ozark for the murder of Constable Paul Johnson at Pinkard last fall, has been sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment in a four hour.

BEST BREEDS OF CATTLE FOR PRODUCING PROFITABLE BEEF

Do Not Try to Mix the Breeds and for Best Results Only One Kind Should be Kept—Shorthorn, Hereford and Aberdeen Angus Will Use Surplus Feed to Good Advantage.



A Hereford Champion.

(By W. G. CHRISMAN.)

All cattle are divided into or fall into certain classes acording to the work they do to best advantage. In other words, the disposition they make of the feed they consume over and above the amount needed for maintenance determines this class.

When we take into consideration that cattle are only machines for converting hay, fodder and grains into some product for human food, and they are the only machines or factories known that will convert those materials into beef, milk, butter and cheese, we get a much clearer conception of the real meaning of beef cattle, milk cattle or butter cattle.

By beef cattle we mean those types of cattle which will use their surplus feed to best advantage in the manufactrue of beef. Of this type we have three prominent breeds: Shorthorn, Hereford and Aberdeen Angus. While these are the three leading beef breeds, there are others, such as Red Poll and Devon. By some writers the Red Poll and Devon are classed as dual purpose; but for the present we will consider them beef breeds.

Of the three breeds mentioned first, we can scarcely say one is better than the other, for they belong on the same plane. It is a matter of choice or preference with each man for himself, which he likes best, and then that becomes the best for him. Every one of us will give our best attention and efforts to the things we like best. Therefore the breed of cattle we like best will give us best results and becomes best for us.

The two remaining breeds are good and in some sections are very popular, but for strictly beef purposes are rather small and have a tendency toward the dairy formation.

When we go into the business of producing beef we want the breed of cattle that will produce that product at the least cost and in the greatest quantities. Then it behooves us to select one of the best breeds. I say one of the best breeds, and I mean one. Do not make the mistake that so many have done and think that you can produce better steers by breeding together two breeds than pure-bred steers of either one. Just remember whenever you breed together two distinct breeds you are producing grades of both breeds and going down hill. Again, when you breed together two distinct breeds you are much more apt to confine the poor qualities of both breeds in the offspring. As an example, and one that is commonly practiced, if you breed a Holstein cow, which produces a large quantity of milk but poor in butter fat, to a Jersey bull, a breed which produces a small quantity of milk and rich in butter fat, you are very likely and most apt to produce a heifer that will produce a small amount of milk, the character inherited from the sire, and that little poor in butter fat, the character from the dam The reverse is your desire, but you may be disappointed. Knowing these things, and also being able to buy the pure-breds of any breed we many fancy, let us act wisely in the matter and purchase our foundation stock of pure breeding. Surely, if we wanted a plow we would not go to the store or factory and buy a Syracuse beam, an Oliver chill moldboard, a South Bend landslide and a Mount Joy point, and go home on the back porch, take a clawhammer and a monkey-wrench to make a plow of these parts. Well, it is just as absurd to think we can make the different breeds of cattle fit together and do the desired work well.

I take it we do not expect to raise beef cattle, or any others for that matter, except for the profit they give us in consuming the products of our own farm, converting them into beef and establishing a new channel through which to market these products.

Then, if this is our desire, do as we would in purchasing a piece of machinery for any other purpose—buy the machine that was manufactured for that particular purpose, and buy the best. The best is the one that will do most satisfactorily the greatest amount of work and at the least cost.

I am a great believer in beef cattle when we can make them consume our farm crops at market price and save the trouble of hauling these away. Unless we can figure market prices for our crops fed at home, then the feeding or raising of cattle becomes a burden and not a profitable business. Yes, they should do more than this. They should make us a profit above all cost of feed, labor and incidents which always enter into any business proposition or venture.

DENMARK'S COW-TESTING CLUBS

Co-Operative Associations Are Rapidly Increasing—Stringent Rules for Management.

The co-operative cow testing associations of Denmark have rapidly increased to about 500 associations. A man is employed by each association to visit the farms and do the testing every three weeks. He weighs the milk and keps an accurate record of the feed consumed, so the net profit per year of each individual cow can be ascertained.

Two Copenhagen milk companies handle over 100,000 pounds of milk a day, all of which is produced under veterinary inspection and in accordance with strict rules laid down by the company.

Inspectors see that every producer lives up to these rules, which require cleanliness at every step.

As soon as drawn, the milk must be cooled and kept below 50 degrees Fahrenheit; the slightest off flavor may cause the bottling plant to refuse the milk.

Then it is pasteurized at 160 degrees, cooled to below 50 degrees and put into small-necked bottles sealed with cotton or expanded pulp covers.

Milk sold in bulk is sent out in large sealed cans from which it may be drawn only through a faucet over which must appear a statement of its

In this way skim, one-half skim, whole milk and cream may be put out by the same wagon at prices varying according to the quality without danger of the purchaser being defrauded.

All this milk is of the same high sanitary standard. Thirty pounds of ice must be provided for every eleven gallons of milk produced.

There are 1,100 co-operative and 300 private creameries in Denmark. These manufacture over 200,000,000 pounds of butter a year, eighty per cent of which is exported to Great Britain. In summer the milk is delivered twice a day and in winter once.

Stringent rules are laid down in regard to cooling the milk on the farm and in not mixing morning's and night's milk. All foods which may impart an objectionable flavor to the milk are forbidden.

The creameries are compelled by law to pasteurize all skim milk by heating to 180 degrees before it leaves the creamery, to prevent the spread of tuberculosis through this medium.

Market Gardeners.

Market gardeners who plant about the same acreage every year fare better than those who vary the acreage so much from year to year. There is too much of a tendency on many farms to plant a vegetable largely one year and then reduce the acreage the following year because prices were unsatisfactory. When the average price of any of our important vegetables such as tomatoes and cabbage is taken for a series of five or ten years, the profits, with good management, generally run satisfactory.

The Farmers' Summer School at Auburn has grown tremendously popular during the last few years. A cordial invitation to farmers, their wives, sons and daughters has been sent out by the Director, Dr. Cary, for the tenth session of the school in Auburn from August 1st to 10th. Round trip tickets at reasonable rates have been secured. The prognam this time is a strong one. The features of the first three days of the school will be the conferance of Alabama's demonstration agents. Joe Wing, the popular lecturer and writer on agricultural subjects, will be in attendance during the last six days of the school. Dr. Tait Butler, Editor of the Progressive Farmer, is another popular lecturer who will talk to the farmers.

A special feature of the school will be the talks and discussions for the benefit of the women of the farm. Mrs. Hutt and Mrs. Holowell will discuss home-making, cooking, sanitation, etc. Miss Powell of Mississippi will give especial attention to the girls' tomato and canning clubs.

The Auburn experiment station staff will be present every day and take part in the lectures and demonstrations.

The school will be strenuous, but the farmers will enjoy their visit and will derive much profit from the course.

Milk Saved the Auto.

A farmer named Richter, of Mamaroneck, in Westchester county, N. Y., sacrificed a load of milk the other day to save a new touring car, in which two women were riding, from being destroyed by fire. The engine of the car began to spit flames. Finally it took fire. The occupants then abandoned it for fear the gasoline tank might explode. Richter came driving along with several cans of milk. With him was his eighteen-year-old son. He alighted from the wagon, and seizing a ten-quart can filled with milk threw the contents over the flames. The floor of the car was afire and burning briskly. He saw he would have to waste several more cans of milk to save the auto. "Come, hand me those cans quickly," he said to his son. He emptied them over the auto as fast as he could. The flames were checked, but not until nearly one hundred and fifty quarts of milk had been sacrificed. The owner of the car asked him what the milk was worth. Richter fixed his loss at seven dollars, but the lady gave him twenty-five dollars, saying, "You deserve all this, if not more."

Tested.

"Eighty dollars for a set of tires is pretty stiff," said Jipson. "Haven't you got anything cheaper?"

"Sure," said the affable salesman. "I have a set here you can have for ten dollars."

"Ten, eh?" said Jipson. That's good and cheap. How about 'em—are they good for anything? Ever had 'em tested?"

"I should say so," said the salesman. "They've traveled over 30,000 miles already."—Harper's Weekly.

ENTERPRISE.

Health here is very good at present. The farmers are just about through work. Crops are growing nicely and are very well averaged to the crops of this section. The protracted meeting at Prospect Church closed last Friday night. We had a very good meeting, excellent preaching by Rev. Bilbea. There was only one member added to the church, but I think that we will see the effect of this service in days to come. The big meeting started at Bethan Sunday. The Pentor preached to a very large congregation Sunday. Hope they will have a grand revival of religion at Bethany. Miss Esther Davis of Clanton visited relatives here last week. Mrs. Tomlin of Selma is visiting Mr. W. C. Davis this week. Messrs. J. Luther Eddie Yeargan and B. F. Boockholdt attended the institute this week. Hampton ball team played the Blue Darters Saturday evening. The score was 12 to 8 in favor of the Blue Darters. Ty Robinson, wife and son spent Saturday night at W. S. Cox. J. T. Traywick and son spent Friday night at T. G. Robinson.

FOUGHT WITH RAILROAD TRAIN

At a point on the railway line between Mirabel and Canaveral, on the Spanish side of the boundary line between Spain and Portugal, there once occurred an odd sort of bullfight.

A train had just come out on a sweeping curve from the hills and down upon a little plain when the engineer saw directly before him a herd of bulls on the tracks. The engineer blew his whistle vigorously and all the bulls fled, with the exception of one great fellow, who made straight for the train with horns lowered and roaring defiance.

It was too late to prevent a collision and the bull was killed, but his carcass, lying under the wheels of the locomotive, prevented the train proceeding. Passengers and crew united to clear the track. In the meantime the great herd of bulls, scenting the blood of their dead leader, came flocking back, pawing and threatening. The nearer they came the more infuriated they grew, and finally they charged like a whirlwind on the little band of workers.

Then all the men abandoned their task and took refuge in the cars. The bulls followed them to the very steps, bellowing and pawing. Soldiers aboard the train tried to stampede the animals with stones. The bulls recoiled, charged again, recoiled once more; and for two hours the battle raged, victory now seeming to be with one side and now with the other. At last as night came on, the bulls withdrew and betook themselves to some distant shelter. Then the employes and passengers were able to set to work again. The track was cleared and the train proceeded on its way.

TRACKED BY POSTAGE STAMPS

Whether a man is a criminal or a law-abiding citizen, he ought to take the pains to stick his postage stamps on exactly straight," an old detective said. "If he is straight he won't lose anything by it, and if he is crooked he will gain. When I was in the government service the first thing I found out about a man under suspicion was the way he stuck on his stamps. One of the cleverest swindlers I ever landed was tracked through his postage stamps.

"After you put a stamp on a certain way for a little while it becomes second nature and you stick it on that way unconsciously. That was what that man did. All his stamps were stuck on diagonally, leaving a little triangle of a certain size at the corner of the envelope. He was a slippery fellow and had eluded vigilance for months. One day I happened to be loitering around a postoffice of a country town where I had gone on another trail. The mail came in, and through the little window I watched the postmaster sort it. Presently I spotted an envelope with the stamp stuck on in that triangular fashion. I got the postmark, hiked back to that town, and nabbed my man. If he had put his stamps on straight, probably he never would have been caught."

Thoughtful John Chinaman.

"The virtues of a Chinese laundryman never have been half told," said the woman. "Not of my laundryman, anyhow. He is such a motherly old soul. The other day he brought my handkerchiefs home folded in two different ways, some squared, some catacornered."

"Why the different styles in ironing?" I asked.

"John pointed to the stack of catacornered handkerchiefs. 'These holey,' he said. Then to the square pile, 'These good. In big hully, not gettee mix and go out with holey hankchef.'

"Kind old John. His idea was all right, but doesn't keep me from getting mixed, for I can never remember which shape means holey and which means whole, so I am likely to disgrace myself with a holey handkerchief after all."

MOUNT PLEASANT.

Health of this community is very good at present. Our farmers are about through work and now trying to put the roads back in as good shape as they were under the old system.

Miss Katie Duncan is slowly improving from a relapse of the fever.

Our trustees and patrons met last week and elected Prof. B. J. Sessions as teacher for the next school here.

MADE UP OF MIXED RACES

Similarity Between French and American Nations Is Accounted For in That Way.

A notable French visitor speaks with surprise of the many points of similarity between the French people and the Americans.

He is merely making the obverse of a discovery which has puzzled many thousands of American travelers. The French and American peoples, with all their manifest differences, are oddly like each other in many ways.

Perhaps the explanation lies in the fact that both peoples are compounded of many and distinct races, fused together in a single nationality.

The mixture of races which has gone on in America is known to all. But an American is prone to forget that a similar mixture has been in progress for a much longer time in France.

Three great races, Teutonic, Celtic and Latin, are represented today in the population of France.

Twenty nationalities have fused to make the French nationality. A dozen tribes of Gauls, the Romans, Franks, Burgundians, Normans, and others literally too numerous to mention, have been mixed and melted together to form France.

Similar mixtures produce similar results. That would appear to be the formula for the resemblances between France and America.

Annoying Honesty.

Having vouched for the honesty of the woman who wished a situation as scrubwoman, the good-natured man was subjected to a severe examination by the superintendent of the building.

"There are degrees of honesty," said the superintendent. "How honest is she?"

The good-natured man reflected. "Well," he said, "I'll tell you. She is so honest that if you throw anything that looks to be worth a copper into the waste paper basket you have to tag it 'Destroy this' or she will fish it out and put it back on your desk night after night, no matter how badly you want to get rid of it. I don't know that I can say anything more."

"Nothing more is necessary," said the superintendent, and he hired the woman at once.

Song Bird as "A Noisy Animal."

William Smith of Upper Holloway was summoned to the North London police court a few days ago for "keeping a noisy animal" to the annoyance of his neighbors.

It appears that Smith owns an ill-regulated thrush which starts singing every morning at 3:30 o'clock. Smith weakly pleaded that it was a lovely songster with a nice mellow note.

In order to escape inflexible English justice he had to promise to bottle it up in a back room every morning until a respectable hour on the awakening of the neighborhood.

ARMY STYLES NEW TO HER

Conscientious Laundress Meant Well, but Her First Efforts Utterly Failed to Please.

At the army post a new laundry had been installed and the management was specially anxious to please and advised that mending would be included in the work.

The major was equally willing to be pleased and sent, among other things, a suit of duck as a first installment. The army officer's washable coats have buttons, but these are not sewed on. Instead, small eyelets are worked in the coat and the shanks of the regulation buttons are pushed through these holes, being held in place by brass rings on the other side. Before being laundered these buttons and rings are removed, to be put in place again after the wash. When the major's coat was returned from the new laundry the eyelets had been carfully sewed up and a bright brass button had been sewed firmly over each. Also the seams of the major's riding breeches, which open from just above the knees to just below, to admit of adjustment over the knees, had been sewed up so tightly that it took the major's wife half a day to rip them. The earnest and conscientious laundress thereupon received a course of special instruction pertaining to the requirements of the U. S. A.

FINE LINEN 6,000 YEARS OLD

Fruits of the Looms of Ancient Times Have Defied the Passing of the Centuries.

In one of the apartments at University college, London, Professor Flinders Petrie has placed on exhibition some remarkably interesting antiquities unearthed at Tarkhan, Heliopolis and Memphis under the auspices of the British School of Archaeology in Egypt.

The great cemetery of Tarkhan, which occupied a mile of desert 40 miles south of Cairo and which dates from the earliest historic age until the race of the pyramid builders, has proved to be exceedingly prolific in antiquities.

What has struck Professor Petrie is the extraordinary preservation of the woodwork and clothing unearthed from these places of interment of long ago.

A great sheet of linen which is placed on exhibition is as fresh and as firm as when cut from the original length—and it is some 6,000 years old. So, likewise, with the woodwork, which, in but few instances, shows signs of decay. Here are boxes that serve their purpose as funeral caskets, built of planks of acacia and shittim wood, and as firm and secure as when lowered into the bosom of the earth in dim antiquity.

Tennyson's Forty-Year Old Boots.

Tennyson possessed a pair of boots well nigh as long lived as those of the old farmer described by Richard Jeffries. William Allingham notes in his diary on March 2, 1881, that "Browning dined at Tennyson's last night. Tennyson was in great form. He said: 'This pair of dress boots is 40 years old.' We looked at them, and I said it was good evidence of the immortality of the sole."—Lebanon Chronicle.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

German Cures.

In Germany one finds all kinds of cures. Every enterprising town has one. Often the cure house is the finest public building in the city. A German talks of going to his cure as an American of going to his vacation. There are milk cures and mud cures, wind cures and water cures, mountain cures and surf cures; but my choice is the forest cure.

Not only does it best please my personal taste but I notice that it gets the most serious cases—those where radical and heroic cures are needed. First of all there are the tuberculosis patients strewn about on their cots under the pungent shades of the Black Forest as about Dr. Trudeau's camp in the Adirondacks.

Then there are the devotees of indigestion and the nervous wrecks, bilious, alcoholic and society wrecks, drug fiends, bridge fiends and everybody; that is everybody who can spend the time and money to come hither for the forest cure. Naturally in Germany, as in America, folks who have to work and support families cannot afford to be cured. They can't even afford the disease in the first place.—Woman's Home Companion.

FOUND RIGHT MAN AT ONCE

Seedy and Unlikely Looking Individual Knew All About City's Street Railway Troubles.

A man once came to Newton D. Baker, mayor of Cleveland, and said: "My town is going to have a street railway fight. I want to know all about Cleveland's."

"I shall be only too glad to tell you all I know," said Mr. Baker, "but unfortunately I have appointments until one o'clock. Will you come back?"

"How can I most profitably put in the two hours here until that time?" asked the stranger.

The answer was: "Go out on the public square, sit down by the most unlikely man you can find—the one who looks most as if he didn't know the difference between a franchise and a double track. Ask that man to tell you about Cleveland's street railway fight, and when you come back I will tell you whatever you haven't been able to learn from him."

The man came back at the end of two hours. "I needn't keep my appointment here," he said. "I found an old chap whose feet were out of his shoes, whose elbows were out of his shirt sleeves, and who looked as if he had just sobered up for the first time in a month—in short, I found the unlikeliest looking individual at large. I put one question to him and he started right in at the beginning and filled in all the details and brought me down to date. There's nothing for you to tell me, unless you know what's going to happen. He hasn't been let in on that."—The Survey.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount. Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Mailroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy, the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrives in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion. In a stroll Betty takes with Hannibal they meet Bess Hicks, daughter of the overseer, who warns Betty of danger and counsels her to leave Belle Plain at once. Betty, terrified, acts on Bess' advice, and on their way their carriage it stopped by Slosson, the tavern keeper, and a confederate, and Betty and Hannibal are made prisoners. The pair are taken to Hicks' cabin, in an almost inaccessible spot, and there Murrell visits Betty and reveals his part in the plot and his object.
the plot and his object.

"Let me go!" she panted. He laughed his cool laugh of triumph.

"Let you go—ask me anything but that, Betty! Have you no reward for patience such as mine? A whole summer has passed since I saw you first—"

There was the noisy shuffling of feet on the stairs, and releasing Betty, Murrell swung about on his heel and faced the door. It was pushed open an inch at a time by a not too confident hand and Mr. Slosson thus guardedly presented himself to the eye of his chief, whom he beckoned from the room.

"Well?" said Murrell, when they stood together on the landing.

"Just come across to the keel boat!" and Slosson led the way down stairs and from the house.

"Damn you, Joe, you might have waited!" observed the outlaw. Slosson gave him a hardened grin. They crossed the clearing and boarded the keel boat which rested against the bank. As they did so the cabin in the stern gave up a shattered presence in the shape of Tom Ware. Murrell started violently. "I thought you were hanging out in Memphis, Tom?" he said, and his brow darkened, as sinister and forbidding, he stepped closer to the planter. Ware did not answer at once, but looked at Murrell out of heavy bloodshot eyes, his face pinched and ghastly. At last he said, speaking with visible effort.

"I stayed in Memphis until five o'clock this morning."

"Damn your early hours!" roared Murrell. "What are you doing here? I suppose you've been showing that dead face of yours about the neighborhood—why didn't you stay at Belle Plain, since you couldn't keep away?"

"I haven't been near Belle Plain; I came here instead. How am I going to meet people and answer questions?" His teeth were chattering. "Is it known she's missing?" he added.

"Hicks raised the alarm the first thing this morning, according to the instructions I'd given him."

"Yes?" gasped Ware. He was dripping from every pore and the sickly color came and went on his unshaven cheeks. Murrell dropped a heavy hand on his shoulder.

"You haven't been at Belle Plain, you say, but has any one seen you on the road this morning?"

"No one, John," cried Ware, panting between each word. There was a moment's pause and Ware spoke again. "What are they doing at Belle Plain?" he demanded in a whisper. Murrell's lips curled.

"I understand there is talk of suicide," he said.

"Good!" cried Ware.

"They are dragging the bayou down below the house. It looks as though you were going to reap the rewards of the excellent management you have given her estate. They have been trying to find you in Memphis, so the sooner you show yourself the better," he concluded significantly.

"You are sure you have her safe, here; no chance of discovery? For God's sake get her away from here as soon as you can; it's an awful risk, my—my!"

"She'll be sent down river tonight," said Murrell.

"Captain," began Slosson, who up to this had taken no part in the conversation, "when are you going to cross to t'other side of the bayou?"

"Soon," replied Murrell. Slosson laughed.

"I didn't know but you'd clean forgot the Clan's business. I want to ask another question—but first I want to say that no one thinks higher or more frequent of the ladies than just me; I'm genuinely fond of 'em, and I've never lifted my hand ag'in 'em except in kindness." Mr. Slosson looked at Ware with an exceedingly virtuous expression of countenance. He continued: "Yo' orders are that we're to slip out of this a little afore midnight, but suppose there's a hitch—here's the lady knowing what she knows and here's the boy knowing what he knows."

"There can be no hitch," rasped out Murrell arrogantly.

"I never knew a speculation that couldn't go wrong; and by rights we should have got away last night."

"Well, whose fault is it you didn't?" demanded Murrell.

"In a manner it were mine, but the ark got on a sandbank as we were fetching it in and it took us the whole damn night to get clear."

"Well?" prompted Murrell, with a sullen frown.

"Suppose they get shut of that notion of theirs that the lady's done drowned herself; suppose they take to watching the river? Or suppose the whole damn bottom drops out of this deal? What then? The lady, good looking as she is, knows enough to make west Tennessee mighty onhealthy for some of us. I say, suppose it's a flash in the pan and you have to crowd the distance in between you and this part of the world, you can't tell me you'll have any use for her then." Slosson paused impressively. "And here's Mr. Ware feeling bad, feeling like hell," he resumed. "Him and me don't want to be left in no trap with you gone God only knows where."

"I'll send a man to take charge of the keel boat. I can't risk any more of your bungling, Joe."

"That's all right, but you don't answer my question," persisted Slosson, with admirable tenacity of purpose.

"What is your question, Joe?"

"A lot can happen between this and midnight—"

"If things go wrong with us there'll be a blaze at the head of the bayou; Does that satisfy you?"

"And what then?"

Murrell hesitated.

"What about the girl?" insisted Slosson, dragging him back to the point at issue between them. "As a man I wouldn't lift my hand ag'in no good looking woman except, like I said, in kindness; but she can't be turned loose; she knows too much. What's the word, Captain—you say it!" he urged. He made a gesture of appeal to Ware.

"Look for the light; better still, look for the man I'll send." And with this Murrell would have turned away, but Slosson detained him.

"Who'll he be?"

"Some fellow who knows the river."

"And if it's the light?" asked the tavern-keeper in a hoarse undertone. Again he looked toward Ware, who, dry-lipped and ashen, was regarding him steadfastly. Glance met glance, for a brief instant they looked into each other's eyes and then the hand Slosson had rested on Murrell's shoulder dropped at his side.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Judge Meets the Situation.

The judge's and Mr. Mahaffy's celebration of the former's rehabilitated credit had occupied the shank of the evening, the small hours of the night, and that part of the succeeding day which the southwest described as soon in the morning; and as the stone jug, in which were garnered the spoils of the highly confidential but entirely misleading conversation which the judge had held with Mr. Pegloe after his return from Belle Plain, lost in weight, it might have been observed that he and Mr. Mahaffy seemed to gain in that nice sense of equity which should form the basis of all human relations. The judge watched Mr. Mahaffy, and Mr. Mahaffy watched the judge, each trustfully placing the regulation of his private conduct in the hands of his friend, as the one most likely to be affected by the rectitude of his acts.

Probably so extensive a consumption of Mr. Pegloe's corn whisky had never been accomplished with greater highmindedness. They honorably spilt the last glass.

The judge sighed deeply. He took up the jug and inverted it. A stray drop or so fell languidly into his glass.

"Try squeezing it, Price," said Mahaffy.

The judge shook the jug. It gave forth an empty sound, and he sighed again; he attempted to peer into it, closing one watery eye as he tilted it toward the light.

"I wonder no Yankee has ever thought to invent a jug with a glass bottom," he observed.

"What for?" asked Mahaffy.

"You astonish me, Solomon," exclaimed the judge. "Coming as you do from that section which invented the wooden nutmeg, and an eight-day clock that has been known to run as much as four or five hours at a stretch. I am aware the Yankees are an ingenious people; I wonder none of 'em ever thought of a jug with a glass bottom, so that when a body holds it up to the light he can see at a glance whether it is empty or not. Do you reckon Pegloe has sufficient confidence to fill the jug again for us?"

But Mahaffy's expression indicated no great confidence in Mr. Pegloe's confidence.

"Credit," began the judge, "is proverbially shy; still it may sometimes be increased, like the muscles of the body and the mental faculties, by judicious use. I've always regarded Pegloe's as a cheap mind. I hope I have done him an injustice." He put on his hat, and tucking the jug under his arm went from the house.

Ten or fifteen minutes elapsed. Mahaffy considered this a good sign; it didn't take long to say no, he reflected. Another ten or fifteen elapsed. Mahaffy lost heart. Then there came a hasty step beyond the door, it was thrown violently open, and the judge precipitated himself into the room. A glance showed Mahaffy that he was laboring under intense excitement.

"Solomon, I bring shocking news. God knows what the next few hours may reveal!" cried the judge, mopping his brow. "Miss Malroy has disappeared from Belle Plain, and Hannibal has gone with her!"

"Where have they gone?" asked Mahaffy, and his long jaw dropped.

"Would to God I had an answer ready for that question, Solomon!" answered the judge, with a melancholy shake of the head. He gazed down on his friend with an air of large tolerance. "I am going to Belle Plain, but you are too drunk. Sleep it off, Solomon, and join me when your brain is clear and your legs steady."

Mahaffy jerked out an oath, and lifting himself off his chair, stood erect. He snatched up his hat.

"Stuff your pistols into your pockets, and come on, Price!" he said, and stalked toward the door.

He flitted up the street, and the judge puffed and panted in his wake. They gained the edge of the village without speech.

"There is mystery and rascality here!" said the judge.

"What do you know, Price, and where did you hear this?" Mahaffy shot the question back over his shoulder.

"At Pegloe's, the Belle Plain overseer had just fetched the news into town."

Again they were silent, all their energies being absorbed by the physical exertion they were making. The road danced before their burning eyes, it seemed to be uncoiling itself serpent-wise with hideous undulations. Mr. Mahaffy was conscious that the judge, of whom he caught a blurred vision now at his right side, now at his left, was laboring painfully in the heat and dust, the breath whistling from between his parched lips.

"Go on," said the judge, with stolid resolution.

Two miles out of the village they came to a roadside spring; here they paused for an instant. Mahaffy scooped up handfuls of the clear water and sucked it greedily. The judge dropped on his stomach and buried his face in the tiny pool, gulping up great thirsty swallows.

"If anything happens to the child, the man responsible for it would better never been born—I'll pursue him with undiminished energy from this moment forth!" he panted.

"What could happen to him, Price?" asked Mahaffy.

"God knows, poor little lad!"

"Will you shut up!" cried Mahaffy savagely.

"Solomon!"

"Why do you go building on that idea? Why should any one harm him—what earthly purpose—"

"I tell you, Solomon, we are the pivotal point in a vast circle of crime. This is a blow at me—this is revenge, sir, neither more nor less! They have struck at me through the boy, it is as plain as day."

"What did the overseer say?"

"Just that they found Miss Malroy gone from Belle Plain this morning, and the boy with her."

"This is like you, Price! How do you know they haven't spent the night at some neighbor's?"

"The nearest neighbor is five or six miles distant. Miss Malroy and Hannibal were seen along about dusk in the grounds at Belle Plain; do you mean to tell me you consider it likely that they set out on foot at that hour, and without a word to any one, to make a visit?" inquired the judge; but Mahaffy did not contend for this point.

"What are you going to do then, Price?"

"Have a look over the grounds, and talk with the slaves."

"Where's the brother—wasn't he at Belle Plain last night?"

"It seems he went to Memphis yesterday."

They plodded forward in silence; now and again they were passed by some man on horseback whose destination was the same as their own, and then at last they caught sight of Belle Plain in its grove of trees.

"Try Squeezing It, Price," Said Mahaffy.

INDUSTRIAL LINES WELL EMPLOYED

Volume of Business Quite up to Normal.

New York.—R. G. Dunn & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

Statistics of trade movements tell of a volume of business quite up to normal. That industrial lines are well employed is indicated by the advances in products of iron and steel and by the better demand and higher prices this week for copper.

Generally excellent crop prospects promise a larger traffic over the railroads and increased purchasing of equipment is noted as a result. During the past week orders for about 10,000 cars and 300 locomotives were placed while the buying movement is expected to gain momentum at an early date. In other finished steel new demands have fallen off, yet the volume of business still is very satisfactory, for the midsummer season. In spite of hot weather and a shortage of labor, production has not been materially curtailed, the leading interest operating at approximately 90 per cent of capacity and the independent plants being busier than for two years. Several price advances have been named, including a rise of $1 a ton on wire products and premiums continue to be paid for prompt deliveries of plates and shapes. There is an upward trend in sheets, the mills being well supplied with contracts several months ahead. Crude steel is becoming scarcer and some manufacturers have practically withdrawn from the market.

A moderate trade is noted in cotton goods. Numerous buyers are in the market and show some anxiety as to supplies for future requirements as stocks in all positions are believed to be very small. Higher prices have been announced for some grades and the market throughout is very strong. The demand for woolens is about all that could be desired and raw wool is readily taken at the higher prices asked. The shoe trade makes a further gain this week and New England and other manufacturers constantly receive some additional orders, but the higher prices still tend to check business.

Prices in leather and hides move upward and available supplies are apparently reduced. There is no indication of undue speculation in any direction to threaten future stability and the firmer values in practically all departments of trade are sustained by the constantly increasing requirements of consumers.

New York.—Bradstreet's review of trade says:

This week's reports furnish a veritable budget of good news. Practically every crop prospect pleases, current trade is of seasonable volume, buying for fall and beyond is expanding, the iron and steel industry is oversold labor is scarce, the railroads are preparing for a heavy traffic in the autumn, gross earnings are improving; just now no one seems to be much concerned about political matters and although retail dealers have to cut profits to move stocks business has been stimulated. Expansion in trade is most visible in the northwest. Eastern centers also note an uplift.

Print cloths are firm with staple goods showing activity. Deliveries of dress goods and men's wear are so far behind us to cause clothing manufacturers some concern and mill agents reserve the right to advance prices any time. In the knit goods and hosiery line business for next spring is expanding and purchasers of washed fabrics and fancy cottons are sampling quite liberally in preference to buying freely for the spring of 1913. Premiums have to be paid to warehouses for prompt shipment of steel products and advances are noted on wire, skelp and light rails, while the scarcity of labor, which commands relatively good pay, tends to restrict outputs. However, new business is somewhat under shipments, but railroad buying of cars is more liberal. Pig iron is higher and in the west is more active.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending July 25 were 252 against 283 last week, 241 in the like week of 1911, 200 in 1910, 223 in 1909 and 275 in 1908.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 26, which compares with 22 last week and 23 in the corresponding week of last year.

ONLY THING IS TO FIND HER

Every Man Has an Affinity Somewhere on the Earth, Is a Law of Nature.

Every man has a best girl waiting

Every man has a best girl waiting for him somewhere in the world. The moment that he is born, the catalogue clerk in Time's great factory assigns him to a best girl or else puts him on the waiting list.

There is no escaping your best girl. No matter where she may be born or how far apart from her you were when you started, the inevitable attraction will work your destiny, and when you meet you will both know it.

All that is lacking is the material realization, and inasmuch as all ideals eventually find their way to the surface, yours is bound to come.

Sometimes a man's best girl is homely; sometimes her mouth is not a cupid's bow, and her features are irregular; that makes no difference; he will love her just the same when he meets her.

Also, she may be another man's wife. Such things have been known.

Here's hoping that it will not happen to you.—Life.

Couldn't Signal.

An old darky with an old gray mule hitched to a ramshackle wagon stood on the incline of Capitol hill, in Washington, during one of the worst sleet storms in January.

The old man huddled in his rabbit skin cap shivering, the mule trembling with the cold. Two congressmen, waiting for a belated car, were attracted by the strange outfit and wondered, as time went on and the darky made no effort to depart, what ailed the old fellow.

One of the congressmen walked over and said: "Why don't you move on, uncle?"

The old darky pointed a trembling finger at his "team" and replied: "'Cause dis yere mule won't go 'les' I whistle at him, and it's so cold I cayn't whistle!"—Everybody's.

An Ominous Assurance.

"I think," said the young statesman, "that some of my speeches will be recalled with interest in years to come."

"They will," replied Senator Sorghum, "unless you are exceptionally lucky."

Matters of Especial Moment to the Progressive Agriculturist

Have something to work for—and then work for it.

It is better to be clean and ragged than to be dirty and whole.

Age gives good advice when it is no longer able to give a bad example.

A well-fixed farmer is usually a good one—well-fixed because he is good.

It doesn't pay to make a slave of yourself, no matter how good the pay is.

Nobody ever fixed up a thing for hot weather that beat pure cold water, and no one ever will.

Don't swallow financial news or stock quotations as they are fed to you in the newspapers.

There are a few people who never wear out; but there are plenty of them who rust and rot out.

One of the first things a man who intends to be popular must learn is to play to the gallery.

"Nine persons out fo a possible ten are dissatisfied either with what they have or with what they haven't."

Take an invoice of your property once a year, so you will know what you are worth in dollars and cents.

Give the boys a chance to make good on the farm before they have a chance to make bad somewhere else.

No matter how accommodating a neighbor may be if he is careless about his livestock you wish for more distance between you.

The man with a clear conscience and patches on his trousers gets more out of this world than the man who goes beyond his means to be fashionable.

The only kind of grafting the country will stand for, is that practiced by farmers in their orchards in the spring, and it is the only kind that pays.

The world has for us just what we have for it. It is a great whispering gallery which flings back the echo of our voices. If we laugh, it laughs back; if we curse it curses back.

Don't stick at home every day all through the summer. The wife and the boys and girls will be brighter and fresher for good work if they get a fine ride or a nice little trip occasionally.

FAILURES OF MANY FARMERS

Trouble May Easily Be Traced Back to Poor Management and the Lack of Co-operation.

Were we to sum up the failures of many of our farmers' elevators we could easily trace the trouble back to poor management and lack of harmony on the part of the shareholders, writes C. Bolles in the Farm, Stock and Home. Quite often all goes well until a competing elevator raises the price and then many give their own elevator the go by in order to grab the unwarranted raise. Another potent factor is trying to work on too close a margin instead of taking a good margin and giving it back in larger dividends. No one ever made anything in cutting prices—at least not in the elevator business.

Actual cases in our section serve to illustrate these points. One association used a four per cent margin and shipped out the grain as soon as possible. Were a stockholder to ship on his own hook he'd pay a cent and half elevator charges while an outsider paid three cents for the same privilege. Although at times there were variances in the prices of this and the old elevator yet the farmers' took only their accustomed margin and stopped at that. In addition to handling grain this elevator also ran side lines of hardware nad lumber. There were cases where farmers saved five dollars on a thirty-five dollar implement and twenty-five dollars on a one hundred and fifty dollar building. This elevator ran for several years and paid from three to twenty-three per cent. dividends, but in the end it came to grief through poor management and trouble among the shareholders.

The adjoining town had $2,400 paid in and then borrowed enough to build a $4,000 elevator and have a bit to start on. After running four years this farmers' elevator had accumulated $4,000 worth of debts and a heap of indifference among the shareholders. The result was that the building was sold for the indebtedness. This failure could be traced to very poor management, guessing at the weight of each car shipped out, using too distant markets, dabbling on the "street" and bucking an old time elevator, its competitor.

One significant fact was brought out in this case. As soon as the elevator changed hands the new owners broadened his grain margin by five cents and enough on live stock to make him decidedly safe.

A neighboring village to these two mentioned, ushered in a farmers' elevator under almost the identical conditions as given in the last instance. Yet in this case they have had good managers and shareholders who have stuck together. They have paid dividends, often reaching seventeen per cent. and have brought grain and provision values to where they should be. In addition to grain this farmers' elevator also handles fruits, vegetables and live stock.

TEST CO-OPERATIVE FARMING

Great Success Financially and Socially Have Proven Economic Value of the Movement.

Experiments in co-operative farming have not been numerous either in this country or abroad, yet their great success financially and socially proves beyond question the economic value of the movement. About five years ago associations of farm laborers sprang up in Italy known as affittanze collettive, which rented and operated land either as a single farm under a manager or in allotments to the individual members. These associations arose as a remedy for the lack of steady employment among farm laborers, and from the start so pronounced was their success in keeping rural families on the land, making farm hands more contented with their surroundings, and particularly in raising laborers to a condition of economic independence, that they grew at the rate of about fifty a year and spread throughout Italy and Sicily, says the Country Gentleman.

One striking feature of the movement in those countries where Socialism is rapidly spreading is the tendency toward individualism in cooperative farming. This is shown by the fact that of 150 such farming associations only about one-fourth were operated collectively under a manager, while the remainder were worked under the individual allotment plan. Many societies grew so fast in membership that they could not furnish allotments without renting more land or cutting down the size of the lot originally granted to each member. These associations have been highly successful in furnishing employment to the members and in the financial returns they have obtained from the labor. They are destined to become established permanently in densely populated countries where land is cut up into small holdings and where farm laborers cannot be employed steadily under the wage system.

This last aspect of the associations has been demonstrated more clearly in our own country. Practically the first co-operative farming plan was the Italian colonization scheme on swamp lands north of Wilmington, North Carolina, which was begun about six years ago. The plan consists of a central farm surrounded by smaller farms, on which the colonists at first are given employment in clearing wooded land and paid labor wages. Agricultural experts train the laborers in American methods of farming and in the use of farm machinery, and the land is then sold on easy payments. Farm supplies are purchased and the products of the farms are marketed co-operatively by the central farm. By this method laborers are trained to become independent farmers and landowners, and it is not unusual for a colonist to clear $1,500 a year. They have their own community church, a school for the children and night schools for adults. The plan is in no sense philanthropic, but is established on strict economic principles. Large tracts of cutover lands are being brought under the plow in this way, and otherwise useless land is made to yield good profits. So successful has been this undertaking from the economic, educational and moral points of view that a plan for the establishment of a colony of Hollanders on a 1,000-acre farm in the same state has been perfected. On a similar plan a Farm Homes association for establishing city and town people on large tracts of unused land in Missouri has been launched, similar associations are in practical operation in Arkansas, and co-operative farming is being contemplated on the cutover timber lands along the Columbia river in Oregon. This movement has acquired such an impetus for the moral and social uplift of the laboring class that it stands forth as one of the most practical plans hitherto put in operation for strengthening the forces that make for the conservation and extension of our modern rural life.

WHAT ALL STATES REQUIRE

Citizens of Every Commonwealth Should Read Carefully and Heed Advice of Professor Holden.

"But why direct our energy in a warfare out of which can come no good. Let all stand for a bigger, greater Iowa. We need to be up and making Iowa sentiment. That is what is most needed now. California would almost die were it not for sentiment. We need Iowa sentiment. We should sing it, preach it, teach it, write it. We want to use Iowa-made goods and eat Iowa grown products. You understand that when we buy Illinois-made goods, then Illinois has the money and we have only the goods. If we buy Iowa-made goods, then Iowa has both the money and the goods. As Iowa becomes a great agricultural state, it will become, if the proper sentiment is built up, a great manufacturing state. We want the men here making goods and eating our products. We need to build up our social sentiment in every neighborhood. Iowa must be more social. In Michigan there is an average of thirty-five social and educational clubs in every county, and we don't hear of farmers moving out of Michigan very much, and you don't see the farmers' children moving into cities and towns. Sentiment, social and educational life need our attention more than factious bickering."

Every citizen in every state should carefully read and heed the advice given by Professor Holden.

HERE IS REALLY GOOD IDEA

Fire Insurance Would Be an Easy Matter if It Could Be Conducted That Way.

Senator Williams at a dinner at Yazoo, said in condemnation of a mooted tariff change.

"They who advocate this change know just as much about the tariff as the old lady knew about fire insurance.

"This old lady visited an insurance office and insured her barn for $3,500. The policy was drawn up, signed, sealed and handed over to her and she put it in her cabba and started out.

"'But hold on, ma'am,' said the agent. 'I must ask you, please, for the first year's premium.'

"'The first year's premium,' said she. 'And how much will that be?'

"'There it is, ma'am, written on the policy,' said the agent. 'A small matter of $24.'

"'Oh,' said the old lady, 'I'm in a hurry this morning. You just let the premiums stand and deduct them when the barn burns down.'"

ECZEMA FOR TEN YEARS

1809 Little Walsh St., Baltimore, Md.—"I was afflicted with eczema for about ten years, the most tormenting and agonizing. It was dry eczema, all itching. It was scratch, scratch, scratch and burn, burn, burn. By scratching I brought sores which scabbed. I tried all remedies which I knew or heard of; some gave me temporary relief, but none permanent cure. I couldn't sleep for scratching, after which there was burning. I saw the advertisement for free samples of Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and wrote for them. They did me good immediately and I then bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and a cake of Cuticura Soap. I was cured in two weeks." (Signed) George Wooden, Jan. 21, 1912.

Force of Momentum.

The old mountaineer, who was standing on the corner of the main street in a certain little Kentucky town, had never seen an automobile. When a good-sized touring car came rushing up the street at about 30 miles an hour, and slowed down just enough to take the corner on two wheels, his astonishment was extreme.

The old fellow watched the disappearing car with bulging eyes and open mouth. Then turning to a bystander, he remarked, solemnly:

"The horses must sho'ly ha' been traveling some when they got loose from that gentleman's carriage!"—Youth's Companion.

Order From Sister, Too.

Mr. Briggs called one evening to see his sweetheart, and her little brother, Tom, was entertaining him until the young woman came down.

"Tom, when your sister comes down and is comfortably seated on the couch with me, I want you to tiptoe in softly and turn the gas down low, will you?"

"You're too late," replied the boy. "Sister just told me to come in and turn it out."—Judge.

Incredible.

"Cholly told me solemnly yesterday that he once had a brainstorm."

"Pooh, pooh! I'd just as soon believe that a jelly fish could have the backache."

To remove nicotine from the teeth, disinfect the mouth and purify the breath after smoking, Paxtine is a boon to all. At druggists, 25c a box or sent postpaid on receipt of price by The Paxton Toilet Co., Boston, Mass.

HER EVENING TO BLUNDER

Fate Evidently Was Determined to Be Unkind to Fair Diner Making Conversation.

"Can you tell me," remarked a fair lady of her partner at the supper table, "who that exceedingly ugly man is? I mean the one sitting opposite you?"

The gentleman smiled sardonically.

"Oh, he's my brother!" came the reply.

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" she stuttered, apologizing profusely. "You see, I did not notice the resemblance between you."

A moment later she turned to her neighbor on her left, who happened to be a woman.

"Do you see that handsome fellow over there, twisting his mustache?" she asked. "He's been watching me, and making eyes at me all the evening. Who is he?"

The other woman turned scornfully and angrily upon her.

"Oh, he's only my husband!" came the biting reply.

Foiled.

The lovers whispered together before the doors of her father's hangar, planning the last details of their elopement.

"Hurry, dearest," he urged. "We will wheel out your runabout monoplane and together we'll fly away on the wings of the night, nevermore to be separated!"

"Wait," she exclaimed. "I have a better plan. We will run it out and hide it in the old stable; then we will walk to the trolley and papa will never suspect us."

They were hardly half a mile on their way down the road when, from overhead, came the roar of the triple propellers of the racing monoplane as papa dashed out into the darkness in hot pursuit.—Puck.

Time for Patriotism.

The organist was not lacking in patriotism, yet he rebelled when requestetd to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a wedding.

"It is not appropriate,' said he.

'Ain't it?" said the bride's father. "For this wedding it is the most appropriate thing you can play. Cut all the rest of the program, if you like, but stick to that. I had the hardest kind of a fight to keep Bell's mother from marrying her off to a foreigner. Between Belle and me we won out for an American and if this isn't the time for the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' I'd like to know what is."

Carrying a Suffrage Banner.

"Was your wife in the suffrage parade?" asked Morrowby, meeting Jelliffe on the street.

"You bet she was!" said Jelliffe enthusiastically. "Why, she is the flag bearer for her chapter!"

"Mercy!" cried Morrowby. "Do you mean to tell me that little woman carried a flag all that distance?"

"Well—no," said Jelliffe. "My chauffeur and I took turns at it."—Judge.

Tuberculosis Day in October.

Churches and religous societies, to the number of at least 100,000, will be urged to give special attention to the prevention of tuberculosis on Sunday, October 27, or on some day during the week preceding or the week following that date. This season has been set apart and designated as the Third National Tuberculosis Day by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. Tuberculosis Day was originally set on April 28, but was postponed because of a conflict with Conservation Sunday of the Men and Religion Forward Movement, which was held on that date. The observance of Tuberculosis Day in the fall of this year will be utilized by anti-tuberculosis workers only for the general education of churchgoers on consumption, but also for the purpose of interesting them in the sale of Red Cross Christmas seals.

What the Addition of an "s" Did.

"Please Do Not Pluck the Flowers Without Leave," was the request placed conspicuously in the garden of a residence to which the public occasionally is admitted.

One day a practical joker added "s" to the last word of the sign. The result was that everybody who visited the estate for the next few days carried away a large bouquet of the flowers, and with the blooms, lots of leaves.

RECORD OF A GREAT MEDICINE

Hooper, Nebraska.—"I am very glad to tell how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me. For five years I suffered from female troubles so I was scarcely able to do my work. I took doctors' medicines and used local treatments but was not helped. I had such awful bearing down pains and my back was so weak I could hardly walk and could not ride. I often had to sit up nights to sleep and my friends thought I could not live long. At my request my husband got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I commenced to take it. By the time I had taken the seventh bottle my health had returned and I began doing my washing and was a well woman. At one time for three weeks I did all the work for eighteen boarders with no signs of my old trouble returning. Many have taken your medicine after seeing what it did for me. I would not take $1000 and be where I was. You have my permission to use my name if it will aid anyone."—Mrs. SUSIE TEMPLETON, Hooper, Nebraska.

The Pinkham record is a proud and peerless one. It is a record of constant victory over the obstinate ills of woman—ills that deal out despair. It is an established fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored health to thousands of such suffering women. Why don't you try it if you need such a medicine?

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.
In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientific for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weakness, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng., and decide for themselves what the new French Remedy "THERAPION" Ex. L. Dr. No. 1 is what they require and have been searching in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Therapion is sold by druggists or mail $1.00. Florence, Alabama

97 A GREAT AND GROWING INSTITUTION 540

Fall Term Begins Sept. 12, 1912

A pioneer in Southern Education, it has trained many leading teachers and other professional men of Alabama.

Better equipped than ever before—new $65,000 Dormitory for Women under construction—campus nearly doubled—main building recently refitted.

City healthful and free from saloons and other baneful surroundings. One or more years at such an institution, in such an atmosphere, means much.

Five Hundred and Forty students (including Summer School) last session. Refer to any of these or to any citizen of Florence. For next session wanted 700.

TAUGHT EXPERTS A LESSON

Accident While Casting Cannon Resulted in Foundation of Present English Gun Factory.

We owe our present arsenal at Woolwich to an accident. The government had a gun foundry in Moorfields, where, upon one occasion, in the year 1716, a distinguished party were gathered together to witness the operation of casting a large cannon.

A young foreigner, named Schlach, who seems to have been almost an entire stranger, but who was well acquainted with the details of casting, noticed that one of the molds had been insufficiently dried, and warned the molders against using it. They disregarded his advice, and when he saw that he could not prevail upon them to desist, he immediately put himself well out of harm's way before the cannon was cast. A terrible explosion occurred when the molten metal rushed into the wet mold, owing to the sudden generation of steam that could find no outlet, and several persons were killed and a large number injured.

It is said that search was made for the man whose predictions had been so painfully verified, and that the government employed him to advise about the best mode of preventing such accidents in future. The result was that Moorfields was given up as a site of a gun foundry altogether, and upon his advice the establishment was removed to the Warren at Woolwich.—London Tit-Bits.

THIS STORE WON'T GUARANTEE CALOMEL.

But We Have a Liver Medicine That We Do Guarantee With Money-Back Offer.

The next time you think you need a dose of calomel, don't take it. Even if you have taken it often before, this might be the very dose that would salivate you. Its use is sometimes followed by dangerous after-effects. If you are constipated or bilious or if your liver has gotten lazy and inactive two or three doses of Dodson's Liver Tone, pleasant tasted vegetable liquid, will "make you feel like new."

We would not recommend Dodson's Liver-Tone in place of calomel if we were not willing to fully guarantee it. So anybody who buys a bottle of Dodson's Liver-Tone at The Upchurch Drug Co.'s store and does not find it a perfect substitute for calomel may come into the store any day and get his or her money back.

It has absolutely no bad after-effects and is harmless for children as well as grown-ups.

Libraries in Navy.

The navy department spends every year $30,000 for libraries for its ships. Each "ship's" library includes 300 books, mostly technical and more or less expensive on that account. A "crews'" library is usually made up of about five hundred books on fiction and of such character suitable for entertainment.

About one-third of the books are replaced each year. The changes are made upon recommendation of those in charge of the ships, but it has developed that this is not a satisfactory method, as much depends upon the points of view on literature possessed by the responsible persons. So it is proposed to standardize the libraries by making the changes in Washington, applying them generally to all ships. It is further held that this plan would work for economy, effecting a saving of from $10,000 to $15,000 a year.

If you sit in a cool draft when you are heated and get a stiff neck or lame back, you will be looking for something that will ease the pain. Fix your mind on BALLARD'S SNOW LINIMENT and don't be talked out of it because it is the best pain relieving liniment you can get anywhere. Price 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle. Sold by Upchurch Drug Co.

A Novel Idea.

A foreign idea is to have the place card at table held in the beak of a small wooden bird or the mouth of a small animal, that is balanced on the edge of the tumbler. These cunning little imported birds have the gayest of plumage.

A Japanese Master.

At a sale in London, a Japanese color print of Ichikawa Danjiro, 1679-1762, of a man seated outside a house of ivy holding a love letter signed Torii Kiyomasu, sold for $400.

"Our Personal Guarantee to all Skin Sufferers"

Upchurch Drug Co.

We have been in business in this town for some time, and we are looking to build up trade by always advising our patrons right.

So when we tell you that we have found the eczema remedy and that we stand back of it with the manufacturer's iron clad guarantee, backed by ourselves you can depend upon it that we give our advice not in order to sell a few bottles of medicine to skin sufferers, but because we know how it will help our business if we help our patrons.

We keep in stock and sell, all the well known skin remedies. But we will say this: If you are suffering from any kind of skin trouble, eczema, psoriasis, rash or tetter, we want you to try a full size bottle of D. D. D. Prescription. And, if it does not do the work, this bottle will cost you nothing. You alone to judge.

Again and again we have seen how a few drops of this simple wash applied to the skin, takes away the itch, instantly. And the cures all seem to be permanent.

D. D. D. Prescription made by the D. D. D. Laboratories of Chicago, is composed of thymol, glycerine, oil of wintergreen and other healing, soothing, cooling ingredients. And if you are just crazy with itch, you will feel soothed and cooled, the itch absolutely washed away the moment you applied this D. D. D.

We have made fast friends of more than one family by recommending this remedy to a skin sufferer here and there and we want you to try it now on our positive no-pay guarantee.

BORES ON RAILROAD TRAINS

Woman Complains of Talkative Fellow Travelers Who Insist on Revealing Secrets.

It is strange how many people, when traveling, are so bored with their own society that they will talk to whatever stranger they can force to listen—yes, and tell their heart's secrets, too. Once, in the dressing room of a Pullman, a woman whom I have never seen from that day to this, told me with exact detail all about a recent scandal in her family which they had kept out of the papers only by the most strenuous effort. Yet for all she knew, I might have been a reporter and I must say I longed to frighten her for her indiscretion by telling her that I was one!

Less serious confidences are frequent. "I've hardly a hair on my head that's my own," whispers the woman who has come over from the next section ostensibly to offer you a magazine, but really to hear herself talk. "These puffs cost $20—and altogether I've bought over $100 worth of braids and switches." Pleasant thought!

It is much more difficult to handle the cheerful, expansive woman traveler who has made up her mind to talk to one of her own sex and who is at heart a very good sort, but who merely happens to be a frightful bore, than it is to discourage the advances of the offensive traveling man, who, seeing a woman alone, feels that he can follow up his rude stares with conversation. Usually a curt monosyllable answer or no answer at all will sufficiently crush him—but you cannot deal out that sort of treatment to your own sex.—Exchange.

A vast amount of ill health is due to impaired digestion. When the stomach fails to perform its functions properly the whole system becomes deranged. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets is all you need. They will strengthen your digestion, invigorate your liver, and regulate your bowels, entirely doing away with that miserable feeling due to faulty digestion. Try it. Many others have been permanently cured—why not you? For sale by Alred Drug Co.

TAXED BY PHYSICAL WEIGHT

Novel Scheme of French Town Authorities That Met With Bitter Opposition From the Women.

A small French town in the Pyrenees district has struck a novel way to increase revenue from taxation. The ordinary channels not bringing enough to carry out certain projected improvements, the municipal council decided to place a tax on the physical weight of the citizens, arranging the following scheme: Below 135lb., no tax; from 135lb. to 200lb., 12s. annually is demanded; from 200lb. to 270lb., 13s.; for all weights above this figure the tax increases at the rate of 24s. for each 20lb.

Trouble came when the local authorities tried to collect the tribute. Most of the fat people formed a committee to appeal to the prefect, who represents the federal authority in the district. Thus a stay was gained. But it appears probable that the town could put into execution the new law if it should fight the case in the courts. Most of the opposition came from the women, who held meetings and torchlight processions to signify their opposition to the measure, which struck them harder than their husbands.

Unforeseen Complication.

Jimpson, in London, had rung up a well known shop in Paris by telephone to communicate an order on behalf of Mrs. Jimpson. After waiting two hours for the connection to be made, he entered the booth and began. Two minutes later he emerged.

"Say, mister," said he to the attendant, "can't you put me on a wire that'll translate what I have to say into French? I can't make that darned jackass on the other end of the line understand a word I say.—Harper's Weekly.

THORSBY.

The Masons of Thorsby organized their Lodge last Thursday night. Judge Reynolds was appointed by the Grand Lodge to organize. Besides the Masons of Thorsby several from Jemison and Clanton were present to enjoy the occasion. The new lodge room is on the second floor of the drug store. It has been beautifully fitted up by the Masons and is undoubtedly the finest in this county. A visitor on entering is very pleasantly impressed with the beauty of the rooms, the hall, anti-room and main lodge room are carpeted throughout, the walls are of a heavy blue paper, the ceiling of white, the wood work, including the altar and stations are stained in cherry. The officers are as follows: W. H. Williams, Master; J. P. Peterson, Secretary; J. Bice, Treasurer; W. A. Hays, Senior Warden; D. H. Gentry, Junior Warden; P. W. Peterson, Senior Deacon; E. L. Mead, Junior Deacon; J. M. Poole, Tyler. We are glad the Masons of our town have a lodge of their own. Why shouldn't Thorsby have all the good things there is in store for her? God speed you all.

Quite an unusual thing happened in Thorsby Sunday. There was not a preaching service in any of the churches during the day. This is vacation time.

Rev. Butler, S. H. Herbert, S. E. Norton and W. B. Tomlin attended the district convention of the Congregational Church at Mountain Creek. The delegates' report a fine meeting and were entertained royally while there.

The Congregational Ladies' Aid were entertained last week at the hospitable home of Mrs. A. K. Horn. A good attendance and nice refreshments.

Thorsby folks were delighted to have Mr. Harvy Carr here for a few days.

Thorsby is on the boom. Monday night the city flashed her first lights. The town people were out and the band played several selections in honor of the celebration. If the acetylene lights prove successful the residents of town will have their houses not only lighted but will use it for cooking purposes as well. Now we have lights, let's have good side walks through town. There is more work yet for the mayor to do.

THE TWINS.

St Wouldn't Have It.

Miss Pearl McGuffin wanted to read an essay on "The Boredom of Great Riches" before the Punkintown Literary society. Si Simmins, chairman of the lecture committee, wouldn't have it. He says there ain't any such thing.

CARD OF THANKS.

Our good friends and acquaintances will please accept our sincere thanks for the loan of carriages, the many beautiful floral designs and their kind expressions of sympathy in our recent bereavement.

Mrs. R. C. RAY.

ENTERPRISE.

Health of this community is very good at present. The farmers are done work. The crops of this section are needing rain pretty bad for we have not had a rain in some time. Mrs. Clifton Vance and wife Mr. T. G. Robinson and wife are spending a few day's with friends and relatives at Wcogufka this week. Mr. Guss Davis spent the latter part of last week with relatives in Autauga County. The big meeting closed at Bethany last Friday. We had a very good meeting. There was a large attendance day and night. About ten members were added to the church. Sunday School and preaching at Prospect Sunday was just simply good. The Misses Silas dined with the Misses Boockholdt Sunday. Miss Nellie Purden has returned to her home in Mississippi after a few days visit with Mr. C. C. Burkhalter. No news for this week.

W. T. R.

If you feel "blue," "No account," lazy, you need a good cleaning out. HERBINE is the right thing for that purpose. It stimulates the liver, tones up the stomach and purifies the bowels. Price 50c. Sold by Upchurch Drug Co.

THE CLANTON HIGH SCHOOL.

Will open on September 9th with Prof. J. J. Pickens as principal and a strong force of assistants. Board can be had in private families at reasonable cost. The indications now are that we are going to have the best school this year that Clanton has ever had. Prof. Pickens will be here within the next few days. For further particulars call on him or the Board of Trustees.

Mr. Joe Langston and mother of Fletcher were visitors to Clanton last Thursday.

Mrs. Heath was a visitor to Jemison last week.

Judge Adams returned home last week from a visit to Florida.

Mrs. White and Miss Velma are at home again from a pleasant visit to Mulberry.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Davenport of Maplesville, were visitors here last Friday.

Mr. W. D. Speigener went to Montgomery Monday.

Mr. Jesse Blankenship and wife and Miss Lula Parker from Cooper, were visitors here last Saturday.

Mr. A. E. Deloach, of Verbena, was a pleasant visitor Saturday.

If your child is pale and sickly, picks at the nose, starts in the sleep and grinds the teeth while sleeping, it is a sure sign of worms. A remedy for these parasites will be found in WHITE'S CREAM VERMIFUGE. It not only clears out the worms, but it restores health and cheerfulness. Price 25c per bottle. Sold by Upchurch Drug Co.

DEATH OF MR. A. C. HARPER.

The death of this gentleman occurred at his home in Clanton last Friday night after an illness of several weeks. He had been a resident of Clanton for a number of years and his many friends deplore his loss.

The body was carried to Fayetteville on Saturday and the funeral took place there. He is survived by a widow and six children and the sympathy of their neighbors and friends goes out to them in their bereavement.

MARS HILL.

The Singing School at this place is doing fine under the careful teaching of Prof. H. C. Collins. Some of the people of this community visited Randolph Thursday, August 1st. All had a nice time. The M. F. ball team went with the intention of playing a game with Centerville, but they were disappointed. The Centerville boys wouldn't come. The M. H. boys played a double-header with Six Mile. In the first game the score was 10 to4 in favor of Mars Hill. In the second game the score was 7 to 2 in favor of Mars Hill. The M. H. teams expecting a game with Montevallo soon. So come on, boys, you are still in the lead. Playd eighteen games. The good captain of the M. H. team has gone to Birmingham, but he will be with the M. H. boys at Montevallo.

This has all been placed since April 1st and I have written several more since these, whose names do not appear above, as their applications end examinations are now under consideration by the Company. You will remember I advertised this Policy some time ago and I wish now to repeat the attractive feature in these policies again. First, the cost is as cheap and a little cheaper than many other reliable Old Line Companies. Second, you get every fifth year a very attractive divided. Third, these Policies have a disability clause which guarantees if you become totally disabled from injury or disease of any kind, you will never have to pay any longer, but your policy will mature as though you were paying the premiums yourself in cash, and you would receive the same benefits. This clause is in the face of the policy. There are other good features in this fine policy too numerous to mention, but if you will call at my office I will take pleasure in showing them to you. Again when you buy this policy, you are patronizing a home man who will appreciate your business, and whose office is open and welcome for your use at any time. You will also be patronizing a home Company—The Old Volunteer State Life Insurance Company of Chattanooga, Tenn., one of the oldest Southern Life Insurance Companies, which sounds good to us, and in patronizing a home man and a Southern Company, you are keeping the money at home where it is made, and where it belongs. Now a word to the skeptical along this line: I feel that it is my duty to take life insurance for the protection of my family, and to induce others to do the same. I hope after this life to at least have a few stars in my crown and I feel that carrying Life Insurance for the protection of my family and inducing others to do the same, is one of the many ways to secure them. Today is here, yesterday is gone, and tomorrow may never come. I am at your service and my whole soul is in the work and your patronage will, I assure you, be greatly appreciated.

You should investigate my Accident and Health Policy, my Fire and Tornado Policy, my Combination Automobile Policy, and Bond Making. For further particulars write, 'phone or call on

THREE DAYS NAMED TO WORK ROADS

GOVERNOR O'NEAL DESIGNATES AUGUST 14, 15 AND 16 FOR THIS WORK.

CITIZENS ARE APPEALED TO

Proclamation Declares Future Development of Farms Largely Depends Upon Better Roads.

Montgomery.—Calling upon and urging all citizens of the state to give their services on August 14, 15 and 16 for the betterment of the public highways of Alabama, Governor O'Neal has issued a proclamation setting apart these three days as good roads days, and asking that the citizens of every community, regardless of age, do what they can to improve the road conditions of the state.

The governor declares in his proclamation that the future development and maintenance of the farms are largely dependent upon the maintenance of the public highways, and that the subject is one of great importance to the state.

The governor's proclamation is as follows:

"Proclamation by the Governor:

"Whereas, good public highways are essential to the comfort of the citizens of every community in the state; and,

"Whereas, the future development and value of our farms is largely dependent on the maintenance by our people of highways, suitable to the requirements of the age, and,

"Whereas, the subject of the improvement of our highways is not only one of great importance to the state, but is at this time receiving the careful attention of all our citizens; and,

"Whereas, the executive committee of the Alabama Good Roads association has set apart as good roads days the 14th, 15th and 16th days of the present month, and has called upon the citizens of Alabama, regardless of age, to give their time on these three days to the betterment of our public highways; and,

"Whereas, the action of the executive committee of Good Roads association has been indorsed by the state highway department and meets with my full approval:

"Now then, I, Emmet O'Neal, governor of the state of Alabama, do hereby call upon and urge all citizens of the state, who can possibly do so, to give their services on these three days to the betterment of our public highways, and to this end suggest that each community in the state now take under consideration the question as to what the people of that community shall do on the days above mentioned for the betterment of their respective highways.

"EMMET O'NEAL, Governor.

"By the Governor.

OATES STANDS BY HIS ORDER.

Cannot Comply With Petition Sent Him by White Men in Jail.

Montgomery.—"Everything in Birmingham seems to have grown except the jail and courthouse."

Such is the declaration of Dr. William H. Oates, state prison inspetcor, in commenting upon his order to Sheriff Walter K. McAdory, directing the removal of a number of the prisoners confined in the Jefferson county jail to the Etowah county jail at Gadsden.

Dr. Oates further declared that he has no intention of revoking his order, and stated that if the Gadsden jail is not sufficiently large to accommodate all the prisoners he has ordered removed, that he will have the remainder of them transferred to the jail at Tuscaloosa, or to the Talladega jail.

Concerning the petition sent him by the white prisoners confined in the Jefferson county jail, protesting against their removal, Dr. Oates said that while he appreciated their desire to remain in the Birmingham jail, where they can see their families and loved ones, he felt that he was far better conserving the needs of humanity, as well as their best interests, by ordering their removal to more commodious quarters than those which they at present occupy.

STATE AGRICULTURAL TRAIN.

Impossible to Get Exhibits Ready Before October.

Montgomery.—The State's agricultural train will not be run until late in October or in November, according to Reuben F. Kolb, State Commissioner of Agriculture. The Commissioner has found it impossible to get exhibits ready for the train this summer.

FIELDS MUST BE WATCHED

Farm Demonstration Agents Receive Instruetions from Washington Department.

Montgomery.—Recent ravages of the cotton caterpillar in the cotton sections of the United States has caused the Federal Department of Agriculture to issue circulars of instruction to the various farm demonstration agents in the several states informing them of the best methods of exterminating the pests. The circular states that the fields should be carefully watched at the first appearance of the caterpillar, and measures adopted immediately for its control.

Powdered arsenate of lead is recommended at the rate of two pounds per acre. It is stated that to control the pest is not at all difficult or expensive, but if neglected it may prove destructive to the cotton crops. Arsenate of lead is recommended instead of Paris green as it does not burn the leaves like the latter drug.

Regarding the application of the powder the circular says:

"The most practical method of application is the one commonly adopted of sacks attached to the ends of poles and carried on horseback through the fields. Take a pole about a foot longer than the width between the cotton rows, and six inches from each end of the pole attach a sack or bag containing the poison. Eight-ounce duck or similar material will be found satisfactory for making the sacks. It will not be found necessary to mix the arsenate of lead with flour, lime, or any other material for applying. When applying paris green, cheesecloth will be found a satisfactory material for making the sacks to be attached to the ends of the poles. By this method a farm hand can poison two rows at a time and can cover 20 acres in a day.

"It is best to make the application early in the day when the leaves are moist with dew. If the poison is applied on a calm day there will be less loss from the poison drifting to the ground. If the poison is applied at the first appearance of the worm it is easier to control. Arsenate of lead is a violent poison and precaution should be taken to prevent the animals from grazing on the foliage where the poison has been applied."

TO SHOW STATE'S PRODUCTS.

Commissioners Kolb and Lee Cowart Will Be on Hand to Deliver Lectures.

Montgomery. — An exhibition of farm products will be displayed at the United States Land Show in Chicago, November 23 to December 8. The State Department of Agriculture and the State Department of Immigration have contracted for space and the counties of Jefferson, Mobile, Baldwin and Covington will be represented as well as Montgomery.

Each day of the land show in Chicago there will be lectures and picture shows portraying the agricultural conditions in various sections of the country. Commissioner R. F. Kolb of the Department of Agriculture and Commissioner Lee Cowart of the Department of Immigration will be on hand to speak for Alabama.

NO MORE MONEY ON FEED BILL.

State Appropriation Has Become Exhausted, Says Auditor Smith.

Montgomery.—Sheriffs can get no more money from the state for feeding prisoners until October 1, the appropriation for the fiscal year having been exhausted. Letters are being mailed to the sheriffs by C. Brooks Smith, state auditor, notifying them of a lack of further funds, but requesting that bills be sent in, that they may be checked over and be met with warrants the opening of the new fiscal year.

The Legislature appropriated $130,000 to this fund for 1911-12. Records show that, while there is a larger number of prisoners being held than in previous years, the main reason to cause a lack of funds is the high price of goods. The appropriation for 1910-11 was $131,000, and it was exhausted before the fiscal year had closed.

C. WALTER JONES CONVICTED.

Condemned to Death for Murder of Prominent Merchant at Benton.

Montgomery—Twelve men of Montgomery county condemned to death C. Walter Jones for the murder of Sloan Rowan, a prominent merchant of Benton, Lowndes county, which occurred a little over two weeks ago. Jones shot Rowan on a Western of Alabama railway passenger train on the night of July 16, just as the train was leaving the depot at Montgomery.

SAM VERGE IS KILLED BY MOB.

Negro's Brother Had Shot and Killed Vernon Tutt.

Demopolis.—Sam Verge, a negro, paid his life as a penalty for the murder, by his brother, Richard Verge, of Vernon Tutt, a prominent planter of Marengo county, near Hall's creek. A crowd of Tutt's neighbors took Sam Verge from the posse which had arrested him. Soon after the body of the negro was found riddled with bullets.

$250,000 WORTH JEWELRY STOLEN

MOST SUCCESSFUL "RAFFLES" ON RECORD IN HANDS OF CHICAGO POLICE.

STOLE ONLY FROM THE RICH

He Watched Movements of Society Women in Order to Pull Off His Coups.

Chicago, Ill.—After twenty-four hours' work the police completed an inventory of the art treasures, bric-a-brack, jewelry, silver plate and other articles stolen by Jacob F. Guthrie, alleged society burglar and forger, now under arrest, and announced that the goods recovered are estimated to be worth $250,000.

After a partial examination of the barn and the room in a storage warehouse which Guthrie used to hide a portion of the articles stolen, the police estimated the value at $150,000. This was nearly doubled when half a dozen additional trunks and chests filled with jewelry, laces and bric-a-brac were discovered. Much of the stolen property was found in Guthrie's home, where he lived with his mother, sister and brother, who is a Chicago policeman.

More of the young man's history revealed that after graduating in a course in electrical engineering at a Chicago technical institute he obtained employment with an electric company. Later he was employed in the municipal laboratory. Subsequently he was appointed an instructor in electrical engineering at one of the public high schools.

Guthrie is 26 years of age, six feet in height and weighs 200 pounds. He is poorly dressed, although when arrested he had more than $16,000 deposited to his credit in Chicago banks.

Chief of Detectives Halpin said:

"Beyond a doubt Guthrie has obtained the most valuable collection of stolen articles I ever saw in all my connection with the Chicago police departments. There is an endless list of all kind of jewelry, silverware, bric-a-brack and art treasures. There are diamonds, rubies, sapphires, emeralds and pearls worth thousands of dollars each.

"All his burglaries were committed in the homes of the city's most wealthy citizens. He read the society column in the newspapers and when he noticed that some wealthy woman had left home for a few days he then would break into the house and steal the most valuable articles he could find.

"He has confessed to entering the homes of a score of wealthy persons. I have no idea what percentage of the stolen goods we have recovered. He apparently kept all the things he stole which appealed to his artistic taste. But he must have disposed of a large quantity of the plunder."

REBELS FLEEING TO BORDER

Believed That the United States Will Increase Patrol Along the Border.

El Paso, Texas.—Movements of the Federal and rebel armies in the district south of the border at this point, together with the yet uncompleted desertion of the American colonies in the trouble zone, occupies the interest of officers of the United States troops engaged in patrolling the border at this point.

A party of thirty men from Colonia, Diaz, to the west of the Casas Grandes district, arrived at Hachita, N. M., according to advices received at Bliss, and the colonies are expected to reach the border. The Americans from the latter settlements are reported to have been unsuccessful in reaching the Federal army, engaged in a series of skirmishes with the rebels about Casas Grandes, and have attempted the hard overland trip.

A report has reached the United States secret service that General Salazar, with 1,000 rebels, has evacuated Casas Grandes with the two groups of Federals, greatly outnumbering the rebel forces, in pursuit.

According to this information Salazar is headed for the border, moving due north.

Dog Finds Murdered Girl.

Washington, Pa.—After a search of 24 hours the body of Celia Funka, an 18-year-old Austrian girl, who had been missing from her home at Manifold, three miles northeast of here, was found near Washington by a Newfoundland dog, which had been her pet for years. August Funka, father of the girl, was led to a clump of trees by the animal, and there discovered his child. She had been choked to death. On her throat were the prints of fingers.

Britons Held for Spying.

Berlin, Germany.—The Lokal Anzeiger published a Kiel dispatch saying that five Englishmen, whose names have not been made public, have been arrested at Eckenforde, in Schleswig-Holstein, on the charge of espionage. They appeared off the coast in a yacht and two of them went ashore. It is alleged that they were making photographs when they were arrested. The police confiscated plates which they found on the yacht and which, when developed, proved to be pictures of the Holstein coast.

MEXICAN HANG AMERICANS

BODIES OF THE VICTIMS WERE FOUND NEAR CANANEA, SONORA.

Madero Says the Americans Were Hanged by Rebels in Order to Cause Intervention.

Mexico City.—Two Americans were hanged near Cananea, Sonora. Their bodies were found and the incident reported to President Madero by the governor of Sonora. The governor has ordered an investigation. He believes the two men were executed by rebels in order to precipitate American intervention. The victims have not been identified.

Juarez, Mexico.—General Pascual Orozco, commander-in-chief of the Mexican rebels, declared he did not recognize the United States government. He made the remark to Thomas Edwards, American consul here, who called at the rebel leader's quarters to deliver a message from Secretary Knox.

The message, belated through diplomatic channels, was regarding the treatment of the American settlers in northern Mexico by the rebels, growing out of the disarming of the Mormon colonists.

General Orozco told Consul Edwards he did not receive the American as a representative of the United States, which government, Orozco said, he did not recognize. However, he was glad to see Mr. Edwards, he said, and to receive him as an American citizen. Orozco accepted the message from the American consul without further comment.

HE HID FOR TEN YEARS

St. Louis, Mo.—Clyde Marcellus Sims, 42 years old, who disappeared from his home in Georgia ten years ago and has been hiding under the name of C. E. Van Wormer, was found in St. Louis, and, after close questioning by detectives, admitted his identity.

His wife, who has been seeking him for a long time and who for years, mourned him as dead, is in the city, and a reconciliation took place between them in the office of Chief of Detectives Allender. Sims was found through detectives employed by an insurance company, which had been sued for a $5,000 policy on his life, under the legal presumption that one who is missing for seven years is dead.

Sims, or Van Wormer, as he has been know here, was taken to police headquarters by Detectives McLaughlin and Boyle.

Springfield, Mass.—The body of Curtis Nichols, a traveling salesman, who occupied a berth in a sleeper on the Chicago express, which left Springfield, was found in a gully adjoining the tracks west of here

"Blue Tag" System Opposed.

Washington.—The senate gave its approval to the abolition of the "blue tag" system or fast freight branch of the second class mail service inaugurated by Postmaster General Hitchcock, agreeing to second class provisions of the postoffice appropriation bill, requiring transportation of periodicals in mail cars. Senator Swanson led an unsuccessful fight to give publishers the option of having their publications go by mail or fast freight, declaring that the postoffice bill as presented was unfair

First Bale Sold.

Savannah, Ga.—In front of the Savannah cotton exchange, the first bale of cotton for the new season of 1912-13 was sold at auction. The staple brought 31 1-2 cents, a new record for the first bale for many years. The bale was received by express from A. F. Petway, of Eastman. It graded middling and weighed 350 pounds. The bale will be expressed to New York as usual. The first bale of cotton was received last year on July 24 and sold for 14 cents a pound.

Roosevelt's "Confession of Faith"

Chicago, Ill.—Theodore Roose made his "Confession of Faith" to National Progressive Party tion. He struck out into new ar advocating measures which he frankly would be denounced as e socialistic or anachronistic.

Following is a brief outline of w he said:

Recall of judicial decisions as advocated by Col. Roosevelt in spring campaign and for which he subjected to wide criticism. Roosevelt now advocates its exte to apply to Federal as well as S courts.

Use of the government to as workmen to become part owners the business in which they are ployed.

The government system should shaped so that the public serv when he cannot conscientiously c out the wishes of the people shall their desire leave his office and misrepresent them in office. Roosevelt did not suggest the meth by which he would bring this ab and there was much speculation a whether he had in mind a fundame al change in the American system government. By some it was int preted as a declaration of an ex sion of the recall to include legi tive, executive and judicial officers the National government from President down.

Control of the trusts through re tion of the Sherman anti-trust and establishment of an interstate dustrial commission to regulate in trial corporations as the inter commerce commission regulates roads. Business farmers are wanted nowadays. It is often very profitable to ease up a little on physical work in order to do more actual business farming.

The farmer who wakes up to the fact that his soil is exhausted and will not produce as it once did is in the position of a man who has overdrawn his bank account. He must make good and that quickly.

GOOD OF CREDIT SOCIETIES

Value of Neighborhood Co-Operative Banks Illustrated by Little Incident in Ireland.

Neighborhood co-operative banks are familiar and in wide use in nearly every country except America, writes John M. Oskison in the Chicago News. A recent visitor to Ireland told a story which illustrates their value. He said:

"Some years ago a woman in the west of Ireland was left a widow with several children. Some means for self-support had to be found or she must become a recipient of charity. She became a member of a co-operative bank in her neighborhood, borrowed £12 and bought a cow. The widow made her payments on the loan monthly and at the end of the year the debt was discharged. Another £12 was borrowed, and another cow bought. At the beginning of the following year a third cow was similarly bought, and a son, who had hitherto been a laborer on the estate of the proprietor, left work to help his mother care for her small herd. Her family was on its way to independence. All this may be found neatly recorded in the books of the bank, which are kept in the schoolhouses by the village schoolmaster."

Any group of people having permanent interests and well known to each other can furnish security befter than an individual can offer for a loan. So far as the co-operative bank idea has been developed, membership is restricted to residents of a very limited area. All members are liable for the debts of each, and every borrower must show that the loan can be so used that it will at least produce the amount borrowed and interest at the regular rate.

Although co-operative credit societies have been confined to agricultural communities in Europe, there seems to be no sound reason why they should not flourish in the cities of this country. Certainly the story of our savings and loan societies suggests that our city neighbors can manage to appraise the credit capacity of borrowers.

The country is excellently served by commercial banks. Our greatest shortcomings are failing to provide credit institutions for our small salaried and day workers who are ambitious, and making borrowing by farmers for legitimate purposes difficult.

It is up to each community to tackle the problem—there is nothing complicated in it.

Be a Good Seller.

The farmer should be a good seller. It is just as important to turn the products of the farm advantageously as it is to sell to the right kind of market in town or get the benefit of trade.

Successful Farmer.

The successful farmer is the one who "sticks to all the advice offered by his neighbors and then some about something they never thought of."

OPERATIONS OF THE CHINESE

The farming operations of the Chinese in California are a marvel of co-operation. One of the most illuminating articles we have ever seen on this subject is in the Saturday Evening Post. It throws a flood of light upon the way that co-operation is managed. It has been the dream of agricultural writers for years, to impress the American farmer with the conviction that he ought to co-operate with his neighbors more than he does; that farmers should seriously unite to study how they can co-operate with each other in the conduct of their farming operations.

The writer of the article in the Post says the reason American farmers do not co-operate more is a "temperamental" one. By that we suppose he means that the mental make-up of our farmers is lacking in the possession of the true-co-operative spirit to start with. There is a serious lack of the disposition to co-operate. Further, for more than a hundred years the politicians of this country have dinned it into the ears of us farmers, that we are the most independent set of people on earth.

The result is that they have got us to believing this fallacy very greatly to our hurt, for it is not true except in a crude, half barbaric way. The truth is we are the most weak, helpless portion of society, getting the least for our time and money out of the general division of profits. Economists are united in the statement that the farmer gets only about 35 cents out of every dollar that the consumer finally pays for his product. That shows how independent we are. The closing paragraph of the article in the Post is as follows:

"The only reason why native American farmers could not get their start in the same way is a temperamental one. Possibly that might be overcome in the case of a bunch of earnest young workers to submitting themselves to authority and accustomed to team work. The principle is good. It would be our fault if we did not make it work."

The modern baseball or football club is an example of team work and submission to supervising authority. It seems we will do all these things for sport when we wouldn't for the sake of financial profit.—Hoard's Dairyman.

FARMING IS FOR THE MANY

Providence Intended That Greatest Number Possible Engage in Securing Soil Wealth.

(By PROF. THOMAS SHAW, Minnesota.)

Farming is for the many rather than for the few. Providence and nature intended that it should be so. Since the soil is the greaest source of wealth in the world, it was evidently the design that the largest number possible should share in this wealth. The larger the number of persons who can be set to work to secure this wealth, the better will it be for all concerned.

It must be conceded by all fair-minded persons that the prospect of owning a small piece of land on which to build a house and from which to win a livelihood is a drawing card in a much stronger sense than the prospect of simply remaining a farm laborer and leading in a sense the life of a nomad all one's days. The ownership of land is undoubtedly for the many and not for the few.

Work of Good Manager.

The farmer who knows how to lay out the farm work for days and weeks ahead has a great advantage over his neighbor who waits for the demands of the day to make his arrangements. If the good manager has the further faculty of keeping all farm implements and tools in good order so they may be pressed into commission immediately in the morning without spending a lot of time hunting up bolts, clevises, whiffle-trees and other minor requisites, he is on the highway to wealth.

Doing Things Right.

What a lot of loss and unnecessary buying could be prevented, if not deferred indefinitely, if all the wagons and buggies were kept well greased, all nuts and burs well tightened, hinges made fast or renewed when out of order, harnesses oiled and machinery kept painted and protected. What a lot of time and cost could be saved if we would all start in now, at the drop of the hat, and do these things right.

Price of Apples.

A farmer in Massachusetts sold a barrel of apples for $2.25, which brought $7.50 in Boston, costing more than twice as much to market as to grow them. The growing represents the use of orchard and land for a whole year, while the selling was done within a month. Either the consumer paid too much or the farmer didn't get enough.

Education for Boys.

The national Progressive party has commenced its career in a most enthusiastic manner and shows signs of herlthy strength. Over 1100 delegates were present and Col Roosevelt was greeted with remarkable demonstrations.

The platform is unquestionably the most "progressive" ever offered by any political party and proposes some radical changes in the affairs of the country.

But we reserve further discussion until the complete platform is before us.

Reports are coming in that the cotton red spider is doing considerable damage to some fields of cotton.

This damage will first be noticeable by small red spots on the top side of the leaves, which will enlarge rapidly and spread to other stalks, causing practically all the leaves and forms to wither and fall off.

On the under side of the leaves will be found a number of small insects, which somewhat resemble plant lice.

To check this damage it will be necessary to spray the under side of the leaves thoroughly with a 1 per cent solution of commercial lime-sulpher, which may be obtained by your druggist.

Spray a strip of cotton immediately surrounding the effected places, and if this fails to check the spread, increase the width of the strip to cover all that may be already attacked.

Among the big exhibits which will be shown at the Central Alabama Fair in Selma this Fall will be that of the Southern Railway which will occupy an entire wing of the main building and show the agricultural an mineral products of the section traversed by that line. An attractive exhibit will also be made by the Canebrake Experimental station at Uniontown. A new feature which has recently been authorized is a negro department which will be in a seperate building and have separate premiums.

The amusement features are now having the attention of the management and some novel acts will be announced soon.

Both the Republican and Democratic platforms contain planks favoring the enlargement of rural credit facilities, and the devising of some means to enable the farmers to borrow money more readily and at lower rates of interest. Very commendable declarations these, but let not the farmers indulge in any excessive joy over them. When we get a better system of credits and exchanges—from the farmers' viewpoint—will be when the farmers themselves work it out and force its adoption.—Progressive Farmer.

THIS YEAR'S ALABAMA STATE FAIR TO BE THE BEST IN THE HISTORY OF THE SOUTH.

The Alabama State Fair which will be held in Birmingham October 3-12 1912, is to be the greatest ever held in the history of the South. Greater preparations are being made for the Fair this year than ever before. The Alabama State Fair has always given more than it promises and this time is promising more than ever before.

There will be exhibits showing every great resource of the State—mineral, agricultural, domestic arts and sciences as well as the manual and literary. The educational value of this year's Fair will be unparalelled by anything ever given in the South.

Nineteen big free acts will be given every day in front of the mammoth grand stand, together with free band concerts in the grand stand by the famous Liberati's band, a musical body comprising 42 artists with world wide reputations. To go into detail is impossible, but they may be obtained by writing to Secretary F. P. Chaffee, Secretary of the Alabama State Fair for a catalogue containing a full description of all the events.

No small attractions of the Fair will be the grand automobile and motorcycle races. Globe famous artists of these new and modern inventions of man will be seen on the magnificient race course in a veritable act defying death by their mad rushes around the course in quest of superiority.

Live stock will be shown to a great advantage and the best of its kind in Dixie will be on exhibition. Poultry will be a great attraction to chicken fanciers, for the fanciest breeds known will be at the Fair. The Woman's Department in charge of Mrs. J. B. Reid will be an especial feature for the women. Specimens of everyone of woman's arts will be shown. The variety will be as great as the display.

Then for fun. The "Pleasure Plaza" will be the best ever shown in the State. Only clean and moral shows have been booked by the management and each of them is known the nation over.

All railroads will have reduced rates especially for this event and it will pay you to come. Come and see, and then you will know just what Alabama has. Possibly your community is given to just one line. Come and see what the other communities have to offer.

Further information may be had by addressing Frank P. Chaffee, Secretary Alabama State Fair, Birmingham, Ala., for a catalog and premium list.

Time for Courtesy.

Life it not so short but that there is always time for courtesy.—Emerson.

MT. PLEASANT.

Our Sunday School is still alive and doing fine considering so many protracted meeting around.

We are glad to say that there is no sickness in our community at present.

Mr. G. W. Melton has returned from the annual singing at Marble Valley and reports an enjoyable time.

Much to the regret of some of the Democrats, Hon. S. T. Wright has been appointed to be collector of internal revenue to succeed Joseph O. Thompson. Mr. Wright is the Republican representative of Fayette County. The negro, U. G. Mason, whom some of the Democrats had slated for this appointment completely lost out.

Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Wallace are visiting friends and relatives near Coopers this week.

Miss Esther Evans of Verbena is visiting Miss Tilda Smith.

Messrs. Stephen and Willie Stricklin and Misses Mae Dozier and Nancy Stricklin are visiting at W. A. Doziers.

Mr. and Mrs. John Harris spent last week with relatives around here.

None of the county fair associations of Alabama will receive state appropriations this year according to a statement made by Governor O'Neal, neither will school improvement and charitable institutions. This is bad, but such is Democracy.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Blakenship and daughter spent last week over in Coosa county.

Misses Maude and Chimmie Baxley, and Sula Hall of Marble Valley are visiting Mrs. Belle Baxley.

Mr. Luke Parker and sister Miss Ozelle have been visiting at S. T. Parkers the past week.

Mr. Oscar Miller and Mrs. Max [illegible] of Texas visited friends and relatives here last week.

LITTLE VIEWER.

WEST CHILTON.

Had a nice rain Saturday afternoon. People of this section have been putting in very near solid time going to protracted meetings, with more to follow. A large crowd attended the baptizing in six mile creek Sunday. How clearly we remember the first service of that kind held at this particular place. It was in the early seventies, conducted by Rev. R. M. Honeycutt, the beginning of the baptismal hymn was:

"Down to the sacred wave
The Lord of life was led."

sang to the tune of Idunea. Some of the Randolph people attended the baptizing Sunday.

Mr. James Nix of Macedonia is quite feeble at this writing.

Rev. Carleton has been holding meetings here for two weeks and now goes to New Salem, then back here and then to Oklahoma.

Of the vast number recently added to the churches we wonder if all have truly counted the cost and are they all on the alter giving themselves, time, influence, money, reputation, all unreservedly to their Creator? If so what a radical change will be in their lives, going forth bearing the reproaches of Christ. By so doing they will be such noble people and will be thus led out from the unscriptural creeds and sects of men into the one beautiful church of the new testament, thus being prepared to escape the great trouble that seems to be near and to share in the honors of the Heavenly Kingdom. The coming light of that kingdom is causing the unusual stir in the world now politically and religiously. Those young converts may be coming in now at the eleventh hour and if they are crucified to earth may soon go in with the King as His chosen bride, but if they shrink back, they must pass through the great trouble. Let ministers and parents awake to the situation and don't keep them from hearing the whole truth.

Mr. R. M. Hubbard was among his many friends here Sunday. Herby Smitherman has been quite sick with fever.

S. N. Waldrup was over in Bibb last week. Mr. James DuBose of Rocky Mount was here Sunday. Mr. J. P. Barrett of Thorsby was circulating among his friends here Sunday. A large crowd attended the Woodmen's picnic at Randolph on the 1st. Long live the Union-Banner the people's paper. Long live every advocate of honesty and truth politically and religiously.

JEMISON.

Editor Union-Banner: I wish to say to the farmers of Chilton county that I have travelled over Chilton County for six years and being interested in the agricultural development of our county I have watched the progress of the farmers with keen interest and I believe the corn yield per acre is five or six per cent. over what it was five years ago. I am just off a trip. Some demonstrational crops in this county, for our government agent, are fine. Last year I thought the crop could not be beat, but I see it is in places. Who would have five years ago thought that on poor sandy land where eight bushels of corn limit that the same land would now grow 100 bushels per acre.

Mr. W. H. Conway has twelve acres that will make 600 bushels of corn this year. How is that? Six years ago 100 bushels would have been good. Mr. Conway has twelve acres that will average 100 bushels per acre and just across the fence on the same kind of land, they won't make 30 bushels and the same kind of fertilizer was used—a plain case of knowing how.

We can't count in dollars and cents the value of our government demonstration agents, but we do know that they are doing a great work which is being planted in the minds of the rising generation and we should appreciate the work they are doing. After the government goes to the expense and trouble to find out facts about agriculture, and they send a man to your door with the goods, we should put in practice their methods.

PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

Whereas, good public highways are essential to the comfort of the citizens of every community in the State, and

Whereas, the future development and value of our farms is largely dependent on the maintainance by our people of highways suitable to the requirements of the age; and

Whereas, the subject of the improvement of our highways is not only one of great importance to the State, but is at this time receiving the careful attention of all our citizens; and

Whereas, the Executive Committee of the Alabama Good Roads Association has set apart as GOOD ROADS DAYS the 14th, 15th and 16th days of the present month, and has called upon the citizens of Alabama, regardless of age, to give their time on these three days to the betterment of our public highways; and

Whereas, the action of the Executive Committee of the Good Roads Association has been endorsed by the State Highway Department and meets with my full approval:

Now, then, I, Emmet O'Neal, Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby call upon and urge all citizens of the State, who can possibly do so, to give their services on these three days to the betterment of our public highways, and to this end suggest that each community in the State now take under consideration the question as to what the people of that community shall do on the days above mentioned for the betterment of their respective highways.

Horse in Warfare.

An army officer, writing of the importance of the horse in warfare, says that automobiles have not appreciably lessened the demand for horses or mules in the army. One of these animals, he says, is needed for every man in a properly equipped military force. Immense numbers of horses perish in every war through starvation, it being almost impossible to provide forage for them during the exigencies of a campaign.

The Coughs of Children

They may not cough today, but what about tomorrow? Better be prepared for it when it comes. Ask your doctor about keeping Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house. Then when the hard cold or cough first appears you have a doctor's medicine at hand. This cough medicine is especially good for children. No anodynes. No alcohol.

Many a child is called dull and stupid when the whole trouble is due to a lazy liver. We firmly believe your own doctor will tell you that an occasional dose of Ayer's Pills, sugar-coated, will do such children a great deal of good. Ask him.

JUDGE JONES PUT WITNESS IN JAIL FOR CONTEMPT.

Wesley Jones, of Chilton county, was sentenced to ten days in prison for contempt by Judge Thomas G. Jones in the Federal District Court last week. The former is charged with having attempted to influence a witness in an illicit distilling case, and with being in court in an intoxicated condition. He will serve his sentence at the Montgomery County jail. The sentence was imposed during the trial of the case of the United States against Ham Lewis, charged with moonshining. It is stated that Jones approached J. M. Kelley, a witness, and asked him to be light upon Lewis in his testimony, and not to speak truly. The conversation was overheard by the District Attorney, who reported the occurrence to Judge Jones.

Silent English Crowds.

Silence is a great characteristic of an English crowd, it seems. The English people are generally very quiet. Once I went to Shepherd's Bush with my French friend. He said to me, "Can you believe that there are some ten thousand people in this ground? Just shut your eyes, you would feel you were standing in a desert!" Yes, he was only too true. In France or Japan they would make deafening noises.—Observations of a Japanese in England.

SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy, the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrives in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion. In a stroll Betty takes with Hannibal they meet Bess Hicks, daughter of the overseer, who warns Betty of danger and counsels her to leave Belle Plain at once. Betty, terrified, acts on Bess' advice, and on their way their carriage it stopped by Slosson, Red, acts on Bess' advice, and on their the tavern keeper, and a confederate, and Betty and Hannibal are made prisoners. The pair are taken to Hicks' cabin, in an almost inaccessible spot, and there Murrell visits Betty and reveals his part in the plot and his object. Betty spurns his proffered love and the interview is ended by the arrival of Ware, terrified at possible outcome of the crime. Judge Price, hearing of the abduction, plans action.

CHAPTER XXII.

The Judge Takes Charge.

All work on the plantation had stopped, and the hundreds of slaves—men, women and children—were gathered about the house. Among these moved the members of the dominant race. The judge would have attached himself to the first group, but he heard a whispered question, and the answer:

"Miss Malroy's lawyer."

Clearly it was not for him to mix with these outsiders, these curiosity seekers. He crossed the lawn to the house, and mounted the steps. In the doorway was big Steve, while groups of men stood about in the hall, the hum of busy purposeless talk pervading the place. The judge frowned. This was all wrong.

"Has Mr. Ware returned from Memphis?" he asked of Steve.

"No, sah; not yet."

"Then show me into the library," said the judge with bland authority, surrendering his hat to the butler. "Come along, Mahaffy!" he added. They entered the library, and the judge motioned Steve to close the door. "Now, boy, you'll kindly ask those people to withdraw—you may say it is Judge Price's orders. Allow no one to enter the house unless they have business with me, or as I send for them—you understand? After you have cleared the house, you may bring me a decanter of corn whisky—stop a bit—you may ask the sheriff to step here."

"Yes, sah." And Steve withdrew.

The judge drew an easy-chair up to the flat-topped desk that stood in the center of the room, and seated himself.

"Are you going to make this the excuse for another drunk, Price? If so, I feel the greatest contempt for you," said Mahaffy sternly.

The judge winced at this.

"You have made a regrettable choice of words, Solomon," he urged gently.

"Where's your feeling for the boy?"

"Here!" said the judge, with an eloquent gesture, resting his hand on his heart.

"If you let whisky alone, I'll believe you; otherwise what I have said must stand."

The door opened, and the sheriff slouched into the room. He was chewing a long wheat straw, and his whole appearance was one of troubled weakness.

"Morning," he said briefly.

"Sit down, sheriff," and the judge indicated a meek seat for the official in a distant corner. "Have you learned anything?" he asked.

The sheriff shook his head.

"What you turning all these neighbors out of doors for?" he questioned.

"We don't want people tracking in and out the house, sheriff. Important evidence may be destroyed. I propose examining the slaves first—does that meet with your approval?"

"Oh, I've talked with them; they don't know nothing," said the sheriff. "No one don't know nothing."

"Please God, we may yet put our fingers on some villain who does," said the judge.

Outside it was noised about that Judge Price had taken matters in hand—he was the old fellow who had been warned to keep his mouth shut, and who had never stopped talking since. A crowd collected beyond the library windows and feasted its eyes on the back of this hero's bald head.

One by one the house servants were ushered into the judge's presence. First he interrogated little Steve, who had gone to Miss Betty's door that morning to rouse her, as was his custom. Next he examined Betty's maid; then the cook, and various house servants, who had nothing especial to tell, but told it at considerable length; and lastly big Steve.

"Stop a bit," the judge suddenly interrupted the butler in the midst of his narrative. "Does the overseer always come up to the house the first thing in the morning?"

"Why, not exactly, sah, but he come up this mo'ning, sah. He was talking to me at the back of the house, when the women run out with the word that Missy was done gone away."

"He joined in the search?"

"Yes, sah."

"When was Miss Malroy seen last?" asked the judge.

"She and the young gemman you fotched heah were seen in the gyarden along about sundown. I seen them myself."

"They had had supper?"

"Yes, sah."

"Who sleeps here?"

"Just little Steve and three of the women; they sleeps at the back of the house, sah."

"No sounds were heard during the night?"

"No, sah."

"Hicks Says Miss Malroy's Been Acting Queer Since Charley Norton Was Shot."

"I'll see the overseer—what's his name?—Hicks? Suppose you go for him!" said the judge, addressing the sheriff.

The sheriff was gone from the room only a few moments, and returned with the information that Hicks was down at the bayou, which was to be dragged.

"Why?" inquired the judge.

"Hicks says Miss Malroy's been acting mighty queer ever since Charley Norton was shot—distracted like! He says he noticed it, and that Tom Ware noticed it."

"How does he explain the boy's disappearance?"

"He reckons she throwed herself in, and the boy tried to drag her out, like he naturally would, and got drawed in."

"Humph! I'll trouble Mr. Hicks to step here," said the judge quietly.

"There's Mr. Carrington and a couple of strangers outside who're been asking about Miss Malroy and the boy; seems like the strangers knowed her and him back yonder in North Carolina," said the sheriff as he turned away.

"I'll see them." The sheriff passed from the room and the judge dismissed the servants.

"Well, what do you think, Price?" asked Mahaffy anxiously when they were alone.

"Rubbish! Take my word for it, Solomon, this blow is leveled at me. I have been too forward in my attempts to suppress the carnival of crime that is raging through west Tennessee. You'll observe that Miss Malroy disappeared at a moment when the public is disposed to think she has retained me as her legal adviser; probably she will be set at liberty when she agrees to drop the matter of Norton's murder. As for the boy, they'll use him to compel my silence and inaction." The judge took a long breath. "Yet there remains one point where the boy is concerned that completely baffles me. If we knew just a little more of his antecedents it might cause me to make a startling and radical move."

Mahaffy was clearly not impressed by the vague generalities in which the judge was dealing.

"There you go, Price, as usual, trying to convince yourself that you are the center of everything!" he said, in a tone of much exasperation. "Let's get down to business! What does this man Hicks mean by hinting at suicide? You saw Miss Malroy yesterday?"

"You have put your finger on a point of some significance," said the judge. "She bore evidence of the shock and loss she had sustained; aside from that she was quite as she has always been."

"Well, what do you want to see Hicks for? What do you expect to learn from him?"

"I don't like his insistence on the idea that Miss Malroy is mentally unbalanced. It's a question of some delicacy—the law, sir, fully recognizes that. It seems to me he is overanxious to account for her disappearance in a manner that can compromise no one."

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Judge Finds Allies.

They were interrupted by the opening of the door, and big Steve admitted Carrington and the two men of whom the sheriff had spoken.

"A shocking condition of affairs, Mr. Carrington!" said the judge by way of greeting.

"Yes," said Carrington shortly.

"You left these parts some time ago, I believe?" continued the judge.

"The day before Norton was shot. I had started home for Kentucky. I heard of his death when I reached Randolph on the second bluff," explained Carrington, from whose cheeks the weather-beaten bloom had faded. He rested his hand on the edge of the desk and turned to the man who had followed him into the room. "This is the gentleman you wish to see," he said, and stepped to one of the windows, and stood looking down, as unconcerned as the circumstances would permit, upon the scene of the previous night's tragedy.

where he had said good-by to Betty scarcely a week before.

The two men had paused by the door. They now advanced. One was gaunt and haggard, his face disfigured by a great red scar; the other was a shock-headed individual who moved with a shambling gait. Both carried rifles and both were dressed in coarse homespun.

"Morning, sir," said the man with the scar. "Yancy's my name, and this gentleman 'lows he'd rather be known now as Mr. Cavendish."

The judge started to his feet.

"Bob Yancy?" he cried.

"Yes, sir, that's me." The judge passed nimbly around the desk and shook the Scratch Hiller warmly by the hand. "Where's my nevvy, sir?—what's all this about him and Miss Betty?" Yancy's soft drawl was suddenly eager.

"Please God we'll recover him soon!" said the judge.

By the window Carrington moved impatiently. No harm could come to the boy, but Betty—a shudder went through him.

"They've stolen him." Yancy spoke with conviction. "I reckon they've started back to No'th Carolina with him—only that don't explain what's come of Miss Betty, does it?" and he dropped rather helplessly into a chair.

"Bob are just getting off a sick bed. He's been powerful porely in consequence of having his head laid open and then being throwed into the Elis river, where I fished him out," explained Cavendish, who still continued to regard the judge with unmixed astonishment, first cocking his shaggy head on one side and then on the other, his bleached eyes narrowed to a slit. Now and then he favored the austere Mahaffy with a fleeting glance. He seemed intuitively to understand the comradeship of their degradation.

"Mr. Cavendish fetched me here on his raft. We tied up to the sho' this morning. It was there we met Mr. Carrington—I'd knowed him slightly back yonder in No'th Carolina," continued Yancy. "He said I'd find Hannibal with you. I was counting a heap on seeing my nevvy."

Carrington, no longer able to control himself, swung about on his heel.

"What's been done?" he asked, with fierce repression. "What's going to be done? Don't you know that every second is precious?"

"I am about to conclude my investigations, sir," said the judge with dignity.

Carrington stepped to the door. After all, what was there to expect of these men? Whatever their interest it was plainly centered in the boy. He passed out into the hall.

As the door closed on him the judge turned again to the Scratch Hiller.

"Mr. Yancy, Mr. Mahaffy and I hold your nephew in the tenderest regard; he has been our constant companion ever since you were lost to him. In this crisis you may rely upon us; we are committed to his recovery, no matter what it involves." The judge's tone was one of unalterable resolution.

"I reckon you-all have been mighty good and kind to him," said Yancy huskily.

"We have endeavored to be, Mr. Yancy—indeed I had formed the resolution legally to adopt him should you not come to claim him. I should have given him my name, and made him my heir. His education has already begun under my supervision," and the judge, remembering the high use to which he had dedicated one of Peggloe's trade labels, fairly glowed with philanthropic fervor.

"Think of that!" murmured Yancy softly. He was deeply moved. So was Mr. Cavendish, who was gifted with a wealth of ready sympathy. He thrust out a hardened hand to the judge.

"Shake!" he said. "You're a heap better than you look." A thin ripple of laughter escaped Mahaffy, but the judge accepted Chills and Fever's proffered hand. He understood that here was a simple genuine soul.

"Price, isn't it important for us to know why Mr. Yancy thinks the boy has been taken back to North Carolina?" said Mahaffy.

"Just what kin is Hannibal to you, Mr. Yancy?" asked the judge resuming his seat.

"Strictly speaking, he ain't none. That he come to live with me is all owing to Mr. Crenshaw, who's a good man when left to himself, but he's got a wife, so a body may say he never is left to himself," began Yancy; and then briefly he told the story of the woman and the child much as he had told it to Bladen at the Barony the day of General Quintard's funeral.

Real Problem.

"Do you think we can defeat this man?" asked the campaign manager.

"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum, "but I won't be satisfied with that. What I want to hand him is some kind of a defeat that he won't be able to use as a personal advertisement for future business."

Quaker Oath.

Two small boys in a family of Friends, writes a contributor, had a disagreement, during which the older boy became very much incensed.

Finally, no longer able to control himself, he took his brother by the shoulder and shook him, with the exclamation, " Oh, thee little you, thee!"

Then as the enormity of his offense came over him, he said, in a changed voice, "Don't tell mother I swore."—Youth's Companion.

Sounds Better.

The feeling of many men with regard to public office is much the same as that which a certain distinguished Frenchman had toward the academy—that group of forty who are called "the immortals." He was asked one day why he did not propose his candidacy for the academy.

"Ah," said he, "if I applied and were admitted, some one might ask, 'Why is he in it?' and I should much rather hear it asked, 'Why isn't he in it?' "—Christian Register.

Red Cross Seals Being Printed.

Seventy-five million Red Cross seals are now being printed for the holiday sale of the anti-tuberculosis stickers for 1912. The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, which in co-operation with the American Red Cross will conduct the sale, makes this announcement and states further that the outlook this year is bright for a higher sale than ever before.

The seal this year is said to be the best of its kind that the Red Cross has ever issued. The design is in three colors, red, green and gray. A Santa Claus head in the three colors is shown in the center surrounded by holly wreaths. In each corner is a small red cross. The seal bears the greeting: "Merry Christmas, Happy New Year, American Red Cross, 1912."

BEYOND LIMIT OF PATIENCE

Uses of the Telephone Will Be Apt to Condone Mr. Busiman's Brief Loss of Temper.

He was just about exasperated with the telephone, was Mr. Busiman.

Ten times that morning he had tried to get on to a number, and each time something had prevented him from speaking. Either it was "number engaged," or the person he wanted to speak to was out, or else he had been suddenly cut off. At last he got through.

"Hallo!" said he. "Is Mr. X. there?"

"Yes," replied a voice. "Do you want to speak to him?"

That was the last straw. Back came the reply in icy tones:

"Oh, no! Nothing of the sort. I merely rung up to hand him a cigar!"

"Under an old apple tree," she said, "I gathered a half-dozen little country-weekers about me one August afternoon, and holding up a book, I said:

"'Now, children, I'm going to read to you. This is the book. It is called "Our Feathered Friends." Who are our feathered friends, does any one know?'"

FAMILY RUNT

Kansas Man Says Coffee Made Him That.

"Coffee has been used in our family of eleven—father, mother, five sons and four daughters—for thirty years. I am the eldest of the boys and have always been considered the runt of the family and a coffee toper.

"I continued to drink it for years until I grew to be a man, and then I found I had stomach trouble, nervous headaches, poor circulation, was unable to do a full day's work, took medicine for this, that and the other thing, without the least benefit. In fact I only weighed 116 when I was 28.

"Then I changed from coffee to Postum, being the first one in our family to do so. I noticed, as did the rest of the family, that I was surely gaining strength and flesh. Shortly after I was visiting my cousin who said, 'You look so much better—you're getting fat.'

"At breakfast his wife passed me a cup of coffee, as she knew I was always such a coffee drinker, but I said, 'No, thank you.'

"'What!' said my cousin, 'you quit coffee? What do you drink?'

"'Postum,' I said, 'or water, and I am well.' They did not know what Postum was, but my cousin had stomach trouble and could not sleep at night from drinking coffee three times a day. He was glad to learn about Postum, but said he never knew coffee would hurt anyone." (Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"After understanding my condition and how I got well he knew what to do for himself. He discovered that coffee was the cause of his trouble as he never used tobacco or anything else of the kind. You should see the change in him now. We both believe that if persons who suffer from coffee drinking would stop and use Postum they could build back to health and happiness." ALABAMA PARAGRAPHS.

Tuscaloosa.—The great celebration, featured by the driving of a silver spike and a big barbecue, planned for August 5 in honor of the opening of the Tuscaloosa Mineral Railroad and the running of the first rtain into Tuscaloosa over that line took place on August 8. However, the postponement of the formal celebration did not change the plans of the Mineral for operating its trains. Both passenger and freight traffic begun on August 5th.

Montgomery.—"Alabama can furnish you all the corn and alfalfa land you can use," was the reply of Lee Cowart, state immigration agent, answering the inquiries of A. C. Drummond, of New Concord, O., with reference to available lands in the state. Mr. Drummond said he would want from 500 to 1,000 acres. "Look at Alabama's corn crop of last year," said Mr. Cowart, in talking about the matter, "then certain sections of the state are proving that alfalfa can be grown here to great advantage, and just as well as it can be grown anywhere."

Montgomery.—Premiums for automobile property damage insurance for 1911 in Alabama exceeded the losses by $10,054. This is looked upon as being a fairly good report, although two of the companies were compelled to pay out greater amounts for losses than they received for premiums.

Anniston.—Adjutant General J. B. Scully, of the Alabama National Guard has authorized Captain William H. Harrison, A. E. Humphries and Major D. H. Smith to organize another military company in Oxford, following the dissolution and mustering out of Company I of Oxford several days ago.

Birmingham.—Chairman Truman H. Aldrich, of the Republican County Executive Committee of Jefferson County, has called a meeting of his committee for August 10, in Birmingham. The nomination of county officers will be the business before the meeting, probably.

Mobile—Through habeas corpus proceedings, Frank Sims, arrested in Mobile on a warrant from Scranton, Miss., charging him with violating the prohibition laws and assault and battery, was released from custody by Chancellor Thomas H. Smith, after a hearing.

Montgomery. — Capt. Reuben F. Kolb, commissioner of agriculture and industries, is more optimistic than he was a few weeks ago. He declared the hot, dry weather of the past ten days has been of material advantage to cotton.

Tuscaloosa.—The Tuscaloosa County Teachers' institute will be held at the Tuscaloosa High school the week beginning August 26. One hundred and twenty-five teachers are expected to attend. Miss Margaret McAdory of Birmingham will assist.

Riverside. — One of the largest crowds ever assembled at any place in this county for a picnic was here in attendance upon the picnic given by the Odd Fellows, wherein they celebrated their thirteenth anniversary.

Mobile. — United States Engineer Flagler has called a public hearing for August 28 to receive a complaint of citizens in the vicinity of Fowl river with reference to the drawbridge across that stream.

Mobile.—Clarence B. Hanson, formerly with The Augusta Chronicle and brother of Victor Hanson, publisher of The Birmingham News, assumed charge of the Mobile Item as vice-president and general manager.

Florence.—The petition to submit the question of a change in the city government from the aldermanic to the commission form is meeting with success.

Washington, D. C.—The senate committee decided to report favorably Senator Bankhead's bill authorizing the Alabama Power Company to construct a dam across Coosa river in Alabama at the place selected by the United States for the location of lock and dam No. 18 about seven and a half miles above Wetumpka.

Greenville.—Every prisoner in the custody of the Butler county authorities has been carried to Montgomery to be placed in the Montgomery county jail for safe-keeping. The Butler county jail was condemned.

Montgomery.—News was received in Montgomery of the death of Frank Stollenwerck, Sr., one of Montgomery's most prominent and influential citizens, which occurred at Mineral Hill, Nevada. Mr. Stollenwerck's death was the result of an attack of acute indigestion.

Huntsville.—The Commissioners of Huntsville asked Andrew Carnegie to establish a $35,000 library here. Some time ago Mr. Carnegie proposed to place a library here costing $15,000, providing that the city appropriate $1,500 a year for maintenance. The proposition was not accepted at that time.

Eufaula.—The compress here has not yet closed down for the season, and there are yet several hundred bales of cotton lying on the platform awaiting to be pressed.

WHY COWS STOOD IN WATER

Artistic Limitations Responsible for Characteristic Attitude of the Humble Bovine.

In a north of England town there was a shiftless man who would never accept gifts outright, although he was always depending on charity, says Al-Priddy in his book, "Through the Mill," relates the Youth's Companion.

He painted landscapes, and my aunt, when benevolently inclined, would hire him to decorate our walls with rural scenes, highly colored in glaring tints, as if nature had turned color blind. There were cows in every scene, and Aunt Millie noticed that all the cows were up to their knees in water. Not one stood on the vivid green hills.

"Jorvey," she remarked to the old man, "why do you always put the cows in the water?"

"It's this way, Mrs. Brindin," the old artist responded. "You see, ma'am, I never learned to paint hoofs."

SCURF ON BABY'S HEAD

Campbell, Va.—"I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment for scurf on my baby's head and they made a complete cure. It came on her head soon after birth. It broke out in pimples and itched and she would scratch it and cause sores to form. Her head was very sore and her hair fell out in bunches. She was very cross and fretful and could not sleep at night. I tried many remedies, all failed, then I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they commenced to heal at once. I put the Cuticura Ointment on, and a half hour after washed her head with the Cuticura Soap. I used them a month and she was cured entirely." (Signed) Mrs. W. B. McMullen, Mar. 8, 1912.

The Democratic members of the house of representatives have been besieged ever by a horde of office seekers, willing to serve their country.

"What for?" demanded Jerry.

"'Tis the gladness of me that's too big to swally!" said Mike. "Every American has the big, generous heart! D'ye mind the poor young felly wi' the blue cap? 'Tis beggin' his livin' he is. I saw him hould out his hand to twenty-siven people and ivery blessed wan of thim gave him a nickel!"

HAD THE BANDMASTER GOING

Governor Suffered Because His Request Was Not Couched in Plain Enough Language.

Mr. Melvil Dewey, state librarian of New York, said recently that libraries would do well to furnish free music rolls for player-pianos, just as they now furnish books.

"In Toledo," said Dr. Dewey the other day, "my project has been lately inaugurated. It will accomplish much for the musical art."

Then, apropos of music and ignorance, Dr. Dewey told a story.

"A certain governor," he said, "was being lunched at a seaside town. During the repast the local band played on the beach outside the hotel. The drum was in charge of a blacksmith, and be heat it so resonantly that at last this message was sent out:

"'The governor requests the drummer to desist.'

"The bandmaster was puzzled by this message for a moment; then his face brightened in a smile, and he said:

"'More drum, Joe; the governor likes it.'"

"Didn't," replied Arthur briefly.

"Don't tell any untruths," snorted father, more in anger than in sorrow, "or I'll punish you! Why did you pull the monkey's eyes out?"

"Didn't!" repeated little Arthur defiantly. Then he hurried on, as father took off his slipper. "I—I pushed them in!"

You Look Prematurely Old

PRESUMABLY HARD TO FIND

If Actions Go for Anything, Young Man Is Still Looking for That Envelope.

This happened in a crowded subway express train the other night.

An old man boarded the train at the Fourteenth street station and clung to a strap in front of a young woman who was seated. As none of the men showed a disposition to let the old man sit down, the young woman arose and offered her seat to him.

Before he could sit down a younger man slid into the vacant seat. The young woman was confused, but only for a minute. She leaned down slightly and said to the man in the seat:

"You dropped an envelope on the platform, sir."

The man jumped up and elbowed his way to the platform. Half a minute's search failed to reveal the supposed envelope. The man returned to where the young woman was standing and said:

"Say, lady, where is that envelope I can't find it out there?"

"That envelope," replied the young woman, "is in the same place your manners are."

The young man understood and faded from view. The old man got the seat, while the people in the vicinity looked, listened and laughed.—New York Times.

"This Is Your Show."

The late Sir George White, defender of Ladysmith, was a strong enough man to take responsibility for failure; he was a strong enough man, too, to give credit to his subordinates for good work done. The first time I saw him was at Elandslaagte. The battle was well in progress. General French was elaborating one of the most brilliant affairs of the South African war. Late in the afternoon Sir George White and his staff rode on the battlefield, and had not been there five minutes before a shell fired from one of the Maxim-Nordenfelts which the Boers captured from Jamieson at the time of the raid, but which were destined by nightfall to be in our hands, plowed up the ground within a few yards of his horse. Almost simultaneously French hurried up and drew rein before the chief to surrender command. "No you carry on," said Sir George, "this is your show."—London Daily News.

Archiepiscopal Feast.

A correspondent sends us the material for a dinner given by the Archbishop of York in 1468: Three hundred quarters of wheat, 330 tuns of ale, 104 tuns of wine, 1 pipe of spiced wine, 80 fat oxen, 6 wild bulls, 1,004 sheep, 3,000 hogs, 300 calves, 3,000 geese, 3,000 capons, 300 pigs, 100 peacocks, 200 cranes, 200 kids, 2,000 chickens, 4,000 pigeons, 4,000 rabbits, 204 bittern, 4,000 ducks, 400 herons, 200 pheasants, 500 partridges, 4,000 woodcocks, 400 plovers, 100 curlew, 100 quails, 100 egrets, 200 roes, 400 bucks, 5,506 venison pasties, 5,000 dishes of jelly, 6,000 custards, 300 pike, 300 bream, 8 seals, 4 porpoises and 400 tarts. There were 1,000 servitors, 62 cooks and 515 scullions. Our correspondent informs us that his authority does not state in what circumstances the dinner was given, or how many guests assembled. Possibly some reader may be able to throw light on the subject.—London Globe.

BILIOUS SPELLS NO LONGER DANGEROUS.

Dodson's Liver-Tone Is a Safe Medicine to Take the Place of Too Powerful Calomel.

In the days when calomel was the only liver remedy, a torpid liver, or a spell of biliousness was a serious thing. Calomel is a powerful mineral substance that compels the liver, no matter how weak it is, to do its work, but does nothing to strengthen the liver and a large dose—sometimes the usual dose—may cause salivation. Dodson's Liver-Tone is a builder that strengthens the liver while making it do its work. It is entirely vegetable, pleasant to take, has no bad aftereffect and is perfectly suited for children as well as grown people. You don't have to be careful what you eat.

The Upchurch Drug Co. will sell you a bottle and guarantee it to give you perfect satisfaction. If it doesn't you can get your money back simply by asking for it.

Moles and Warts

Removed wish Molesoff, without pain or danger, no matter how large, or how far raised above the surface of the skin. And they will never return, and no trace or scar will be left, where the mole or wart was seated. Molesoff is applied directly to the Mole or Wart, which entirely disappears in about six days, killing the germ, leaving the skin smooth and natural.

Letters from personages we all know, together with much valuable information, are contained in an attractive booklet, which will be mailed you free upon request.

Molesoff is put up only in one dollar bottles. Orders are filled immediately upon receipt of price, and mailed in a plain case, accompanied by full directions, and contains enough remedy to remove six to ten ordinary Moles or Warts. We sell Molesoff under positive guarantee, if it fails to remove your Mole or Wart, we will promptly refund you your dollar.

A vast amount of ill health is due to impaired digestion. When the stomach fails to perform its functions properly the whole system becomes deranged. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets is all you need. They will strengthen your digestion, invigorate your liver, and regulate your bowels, entirely doing away with that miserable feeling due to faulty digestion. Try it. Many others have been permanently cured—why not you? For sale by Alred Drug Co.

Landed at Last.

A man who was much in need of sleep rolled out of bed during the night. The jar did not awake him thoroughly, and his hand wandered in exploration. It encountered the mesh of some protruding springs and a sturdy, iron corner post. "In jail at last," he murmured as he passed away.

Granulated Sore Eyes Cured.

"For twenty years I suffered from a bad case of granulated sore eyes," says Martin Boyd of Henrietta, Ky. "In February, 1903, a gentleman asked me to try Chamberlain's Salve. NOTICE OF PETITION TO SELL LAND TO PAY DEBTS.

State of Alabama, Chilton County. } Probate Court. July 17th, 1912.

To J. T. Green, of Bowdon, in the State of Georgia:

Whereas, W. R. K. Stanford, Administrator of the Estate of Elisha H. Green deceased, has filed his petition in writing under oath in said Court, for an order to sell certain lands belonging to said Estate, described in said petition, for paying the debts due by said Estate, upon the ground that the personal property of said Estate is insufficient for the payment of the debts, and the 19th day of August, 1912, has been appointed for the hearing of said petition:

You are, therefore, hereby commanded to appear before the said Court on said day to contest said petition if you think proper.

Witness my hand, this 17th day of July, 1912.

Oh, How I Itched!

What long nerve-racking days of constant torture—what sleepless nights of terrible agony—itch—itch—itch, constant itch, until it seemed that I must tear off my very skin—then—

Instant relief—my skin cooled, soothed and healed!

The very first drops of D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema stopped that awful itch instantly; yes, the very moment D.D.D. touched the burning skin the torture ceased. A 25c bottle proved it.

D.D.D. has been known for years as the only absolutely reliable eczema remedy, for it washes away the disease germs and leaves the skin as clear and healthy as that of a child.

All other druggists have D.D.D. Prescription—go to them if you can't come to us—but don't accept some big profit substitute.

But if you come to our store, we are so certain of what D.D.D. will do for you that we offer you a full size bottle on this guarantee:—If you do not find that it takes away the Itch At Once, it costs you not a cent.

MASS CONVENTION CALLED FOR FRIDAY, AUGUST 30, 1912

An enthusiastic meeting of the Executive Committee of the Republican Party of Chilton County was held at the Court House, Clanton, on Wednesday, August 14, when 18 members were present in person, and 9 were represented by proxies—the full committee being 32. In addition there were about 30 interested visitors, and the entire gathering was enthusiastical at the prospects of the new national party—the Progressive.

Nearly every one present made short speeches as to the advisability of organizing the new party in Chilton, and evidently there is a strong feeling prevalent that now is an opportune time to break away from old traditions and to encourage with our sanction and support the new party which promises relief from existing conditions, and after much discussion it was unanimously resolved to call a mass meeting of the people of Chilton County at Clanton on Friday, August 30, 1912, to discuss and, if it should it be so decided, formally organize the Progressive Party of Chilton County.

OLD TIME RELIGION.

"Friend to All," "Blue Jay" and "W. W." have been writing some upon the subject of old time religion. They claim there is no discussion, although they differ some in their views, and as there seems to be no limit to number, I would like to have a word.

Surely Mr. Blue Jay cannot object to old time religion, for it is Bible religion. When the commandments were given to Adam and Eve with a promise of reward for obedience or disobedience, that was then the newest but now the oldest religion that we know of, and there was sin then, for they disobeyed. In the second dispensation, God promised a Redeemer and when He sent His beloved Son to save all who would believe on Him and accept Him. The Jews, the very elect tribe, rejected Him and crucified Him. He chose His disciples to preach His gospel and He loved them, but Judas betrayed Him, Peter denied Him and Thomas doubted Him. All that was new religion then, but is very old now, and there was sin then as well as now. Paul and Peter disagreed and separated on account of different faith and history informs us that there soon began to be different doctrines and practices introduced in the church and it split, and there was another denomination known as the Catholics and they continued to divide and bring in new denominations until they had become almost innumerable, and many times these denominations when they would get advantage would persecute and put to death other Christians who differed from them in faith. Despite all of these things people are calling for and singing old time religion, it saved father and its good enough for me.

We find no evidence to prove that religion is not as pure today as it ever has been. The Bible certainly condemns looking back and teaches progress. There are probably more words and expressions used to describe religion than any one thing. Grow, increase, add, gather in, move, press forward, a race, run, walk, a journey, a pilgrimage, a fight, a battle, a conflict and a warfare are some of them. Then the Savior said: "I am the true vine and the branch that beareth no fruit the Father taketh away."

We never see a bunch of grapes growing on an old vine, but always on a new branch, showing that there must be new growth all the time, and we believe that in spite of every hindrance the church has been moving, not going out after new doctrines and practices, but pressing forward, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, doing the work, having the gospel preached to the lost and dying and sending it to the heathen in foreign lands in obedience to the last command given by the Savior before His ascension. "Go ye to all the world and preach my gospel to every creature." It seems that Peter was not willing to do this until he was taught by that wonderful vision. Then he was ready to exclaim: "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but, in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him."

Yet there are a great many even now who are like Peter [illegible]

This has all been placed since April 1st and I have written several more since these, whose names do not appear above, as their applications end examinations are now under consideration by the Company. You will remember I advertised this Policy some-time ago and I wish now to repeat the attractive feature in these policies again. First, the cost is as cheap and a little cheaper than many other reliable Old Line Companies. Second, you get every fifth year a very attractive divided. Third, these Policies have a disability clause which guarantees if you become totally disabled from injury or disease of any kind, you will never have to pay any longer, but your policy will mature as though you were paying the premiums yourself in cash, and you would receive the same benefits. This clause is in the face of the policy. There are other good features in this fine policy too numerous to mention, but if you will call at my office I will take pleasure in showing them to you. Again when you buy this policy, you are patronizing a home man who will appreciate your business, and whose office is open and welcome for your use at any time. You will also be patronizing a home Company—The Old Volunteer State Life Insurance Company of Chattanooga, Tenn., one of the oldest Southern Life Insurance Companies, which sounds good to us, and in patronizing a home man and a Southern Company, you are keeping the money at home where it is made, and where it belongs. Now a word to the skeptical along this line: I feel that it is my duty to take life insurance for the protection of my family, and to induce others to do the same. I hope after this life to at least have a few stars in my crown and I feel that carrying Life Insurance for the protection of my family and inducing others to do the same, is one of the many ways to secure them. Today is here, yesterday is gone, and tomorrow may never come. I am at your service and my whole soul is in the work and your patronage will, I assure you, be greatly appreciated.

You should investigate my Accident and Health Policy, my Fire and Tornado Policy, my Combination Automobile Policy, and Bond Making. For further particulars write, 'phone or call on

ALABAMA GINNED 1,571,361 BALES

MONTGOMERY LED PAST YEAR WITH 56,351 TO 410 BALES FOR MOBILE.

RAGLAND FILES HIS REPORT

Statistics Incomplete Owing to Failure of Gin Operators to Comply With Law.

Montgomery.—Alabama ginned 1,571,361 bales of cotton during the fiscal year ending August 1, 1912, according to an incomplete report made to the Governor by E. M. Ragland, Director of the Bureau of Cotton Statistics. Mr. Ragland said his inability to make a full report was due to the fact that some gin operators did not file statements with him in accordance with the law.

The report shows that Montgomery County lead in the number of bales ginned, it furnishing 56,351, while Mobile County was last with 410 bales. The state has 202 warehouses, and these handled 1,279,833 bales during the year. Warehouses in Dallas County lead in the number of bales handled running the total of 177,455, while Montgomery was second with 118,408. Mr. Ragland said much Montgomery County cotton did not pass through warehouses. The State has 3,329 gins according to the report.

"Many of those required to file statements with the bureau seem to think our work is connected with that of the government and file only the government report," said Mr. Ragland. "We are trying to impress upon them that a report must be filed with us."

MONTGOMERY MEN HONORED.

McNeel and Graves to Assist Wilson Campaign Manager in East.

Montgomery.—Signal honor has been shown two prominent Montgomery men by managers of the national democratic campaign. John D. McNeel, private secretary to Governor O'Neal, has been designated to assist W. G. McAdoo, one of Wilson's campaign managers in New York state, in organizing the business men of that state in behalf of Governor Wilson, and General Bibb Graves, well known in military and official circles throughout Alabama, will also assist in Wilson's campaign in New York state.

RESIGNS AS STAFF MEMBER.

O'Neal Accepts Withdrawal Without Making Comment.

Montgomery.—Governor O'Neal has accepted the resignation of Henry F. Vandiver, of Montgomery as Colonel on his staff. The resignation came to the Governor's desk during his absence in the East, and was accepted upon his return.

Just what prompted this action on the part of Mr. Vandiver has not been made known, either by him or the Governor. The Governor declined to discuss the matter for publication when he announced his acceptance and withdrew the commission.

WILL HAVE NO LYNCHINGS.

O'Neal Investigating Shooting of Negro Who Killed Planter In Sumter.

Montgomery.—An investigation of the shooting of a negro near Livingston in Sumter county, two weeks ago by a posse of white men was begun by Governor O'Neal. The governor wrote to Sheriff John P. Ramsey, of Sumter county, and to the judge of the circuit court of that district for information concerning the killing of the negro. The negro shot by the posse is alleged to have killed Vernon Tutt, a resident of Sumter county. Two other negroes are said to have been implicated in the killing of Tutt.

According to information which the governor received, a lynching followed the shooting of Tutt, and the governor is seeking to ascertain whether or not this was true.

"I am determined that a lynching shall not occur in Alabama without a thorough investigation," said Governor O'Neal.

Form New Bank.

Montgomery.—Petition for the formation of the Farmers' Loan and Banking company of Mobile, has been received by the state banking department. The new corporation will have an authorized capital of $40,000, and will begin business within the near future.

Many Applications For Pensions.

Montgomery.—The state pension board met at the capitol for the purpose of considering new applications for pensions and for the revision of the old list. Reports from 30 counties in the state were received by the board and 2,000 applications for pensions were received. The board expects to be in session for about 10 days, though the business before the board may be of such a voluminous nature as to require a two weeks' session.

RECEIPTS LESS THAN IN 1911

Tax On Fertilizer Tags Brought $157,425 Into the State Treasury.

Montgomery.—Figures compiled by Capt. John C. Cheney, chief clerk in the department of agriculture and industries, show that for the year 1911-1912 the receipts from the sale of fertilizer tags amounted to $157,425, which was $3,180 less than the receipts for the previous year.

Captain Cheney attributes the falling off in the receipts of this year to several causes, first of which he thinks may be accounted for by reason of the fact that cotton fell off considerably in price during the first of this year, which prevented farmers from buying much fertilizer.

Another cause Captain Cheney attributes to the weather, which prevented many of the farmers of the state from planting early in the spring of this year. This is probably the chief cause, according to Captain Cheney.

The receipts for the year include the returns from the sale of 1,463,000 1 1-2-cent fertilizer tags, which were not offered during the previous year. These tags were authorized by the last legislature and wre used on sacks of fertilizer weighing 100 pounds and on cotton meal sacks of the same weight.

Had these tags been on sale during the year 1910-11, it is probable, according to Captain Cheney, that the falling off in the receipts for this year would have been considerably larger.

RECEIVES SUGGESTIONS.

President Pelham Will Call Judicial Commission Together in October.

Montgomery.—Judge John Pelham of the state court of appeals, president of the judicial commission, announces that he will probably call a meeting of the commission for some time in October, probably during the first week in that month.

Judge Pelham thinks that by that time the various sub-committees will have had ample time to prepare their reports on the several questions of judicial reform which were presented to them. Some of the committees have already held meetings and it is understood that they are ready to make a report to the commission as a whole.

The meeting in October promises to be one of great interest throughout the entire state, as the subject of judicial reform has attracted considerable attention in Alabama during the past few months. Suggestions relative to various methods of reform are constantly being submitted to Judge Pelham, and it is expected that when the commission meets steps will be taken looking to a complete reformation of the entire judicial system of the state.

SENTENCED TO DIE SEPT. 13.

Judge Brown Condemns Rowan Slayer to Death.

Montgomery. — Judge Armstead Brown of the city court sentenced C. Walter Jones to be hanged on Friday, September 13, for the murder of Sloan Rowan, a Benton, Lowndes county, merchant, which occurred on the night of July 16 on a Western of Alabama passenger train, just as the train was leaving the station.

Immediately after pronouncing the sentence attorneys for the defense served notice of an appeal to the supreme court, and Judge Brown suspended sentence pending a decision of the higher tribunal.

Gadsden.—President J. M. Spradlin, of the proposed Birmingham and Chattanooga railroad, made official announcement that the premanent route of the line had been established by way of Oneonta and Boaz. The right of way between Boaz and Chattanooga already has been secured, as have the right of way and terminal points at Chattanooga.

Montgomery.—Evidence of progress in growth of population is to be found in the figures of Montgomery's 1912 school census. Figures reveal an increase of 346 school children in Montgomery within the last two years. The census of 1912, which has been completed for the city of Montgomery, shows that there are 9,846 children in the schools of the city, as against 9,500 for 1910.

Sheffield.—The petition for an election for a commission form of government has been filed and certified before the probate judge of Colbert county, and R. A. Willhoyt, the mayor of Sheffield, has called the election for Monday, August 19, 1912. The proposition reads thus: 'Shall the propoeition to organize the city of Sheffield, under the commission government, act of the legislature of Alabama of 1911, applicable to class D cities be adopted."

INSTITUTES IN FOUR COUNTIES.

Teachers Holding Meeting in Greenville, Luverne, Fort Deposit and Prattville.

Montgomery.—Teachers' institutes are being held in four counties of the state this week. The teachers from Butler, Escambia, Monroe and Conecuh counties met at Greenville, where one of the largest institutes of the summer is being held. As many as 400 white teachers are in attendance and the [illegible] institute [illegible] the week.

SEVEN GO TO DEATH IN ELECTRIC CHAIR

SIX ITALIANS AND A NEGRO PAY PENALTY FOR MURDER IN NEW YORK.

FIVE DIE FOR SAME CRIME

Black Slew New York Policeman—Seventh Man Killed His Wife.

Ossining, N. Y.—Seven murderers were electrocuted in Sing Sing. This is the largest number of criminals to suffer the death penalty by electricity on any one day since the electric chair was adopted as a method of capital punishment. Six Italians and one negro were executed. They went to death quietly. The warden's duty was accomplished in one hour and 16 minutes.

The condemned were put to death in the following order: John W. Collins, negro; Lorenzo L. Call, Salvatore Demarco, Filepo Demarco, Angelo Giusto and Vincenzo Cona and Joseph Ferrone, Italians.

Prison guards expected Ferrone to put up a fight on his way to the execution chair but he was meek. Cona fainted as the straps were being adjusted. The cap was fixed quickly and the voltage followed. The Italians protested their innocence. The condemned negro came in with a smile and seemingly satisfied. He did not deny his guilt. He prayed on his knees at the chair before he was executed.

Giusto, Cona, Call and the two Demarco men were convicted of the murder of Mrs. Mary Hall in a lonely farmhouse at Griffens corner in West Chester county, November 9, 1911. Santa Senaza, the sixth member of the band of assassins was electrocuted July 8. He confessed.

Collins killed Michael Lynch, a New York policeman, on the morning of July 1, 1911. Collins had been drinking and had fired a revolver out of his room window in the section of New York known as Hell's Kitchen. Lynch heard the shots and went to investigate. When he knocked at the door Collins opened it and fired his revolver.

Joseph Ferrone killed his wife, Kate Ferrone, in New Yorfk, October 24, 1911. When convicted Ferrone attacked a juryman and then attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat with a piece of broken watch face. On the way to the death house Ferrone made a second attempt at committing suicide by trying to swallow a jagged piece of tin.

MANY KILLED IN REBEL ATTACK.

Passenger Train Fired on From Ambush.

Mexico City.—Thirty-six soldiers and more than 20 passengers were slaughtered by Zapatistas in a canyon one kilometer north of Titumínan, 110 miles southeast of Mexico City, when a passenger train southbound from this city was attacked from ambush. Meager details indicate that the savagery displayed was not less, and perhaps greater than that which characterized the massacre of troops and passengers on a train between Cuernavaca and Mexico City on July 20. So far as known only a part of the train crew escaped.

After the firing ceased the rebels swarmed down the hillside and set fire to the three cars composing the train. A few of the wounded had crawled out on to the right of way, thus escaping the fate of those unable to leave the cars. They were burned. According to reports the leader of the rebels made absolutely no effort to restrain his men from acts of brutality.

The wounded pleading for their lives, were struck down without pity, and even looting was held in abeyance until the slaughter was complete.

Not satisfied with robbing their victims in ordinary manner, the fingers of men and women were chopped off in order that the rings they wore might be more quickly taken off.

Ornaments were torn from the ears of the women and their bodies were also mutilated by their brutalities.

Cow is Mother of Triplets.

New Orleans.—Veterinarians here claim for Metairie Ridge, a suburban district of the city, the distinction of having the prize non-race suicide cow of the country. She recently gave birth to triplets and the three calves, contrary to what veterinarians say is the precedent in zoology, are healthy. The same cow 10 months ago gave birth to two calves.

1,000 PLOPLE DEAD AND 6,000 INJURED

DEATH ROLL OF THE EARTHQUAKE IN TURKEY IS CONSTANTLY GROWING.

HOSPITALS ARE CROWDED

Towns Completely Destroyed and Fires Are Reported From Many Cities.

Constantinople, Turkey.—The interruption of telegraphic communication makes it very difficult to obtain accurate details of the disastrous seismic disturbance which occurred on both sides of the Dardanelles.

No accurate figures of the number of victims can be tabulated, though some estimates place the death list at 1,000 and the injured from 5,000 to 6,000.

In the town of Shary-Koy, which was completely destroyed, sixty persons were killed and 150 injured. Fires are reported from many cities in which numerous buildings were destroyed.

Fissures opened to a length of about a mile along the river at Lule-Burgas, 40 miles southeast of Adrianople, and from these apertures hot water, sand, foam and sulphurous vapors were emitted.

Everywhere in the stricken zone there is terrible want and distress. Appeals for doctors and help are constantly being received at the capital, and the government is doing its utmost to satisfy them. The hospitals here are crowded with injured persons.

The vall of Adrianople reported to Consatntinople the loss of life there was small. The quake, however, seriously damaged the public buildings of the city.

C.—Startling disclosures followed a rigid investigation into the cause and circumstances of the explosion of an infernal machine in the High Point office of the Southern Express company, and from which Manager W. M. Busbee is in a critical condition and his cashier, Alton Morton, is suffering from serious burns.

The investigation was under the direction of United States District Attorney A. E. Holton and Police Chief Ridge, and from revelations made by a High Point society girl it is admitted by Chief Ridge that his men are searching for a young Thomasville business man of prominent social connections.

Until an arrest is made officials decline to real any names, though they stated that it had been positively ascertained that the package concealing the deadly machine was intended for a High Point girl of prominent family rather than for Postmaster Charles Hoover of Thomasville.

It is stated that the package was entered at the Thomasville office on the morning of December 2 last, and that through a mistake in billing it was way-billed to Charles Hoover, at High Point. The original shipping tag, however, bore the name and address of a High Point girl. Expressmen made unsatisfactory inquiry, the young woman declaring that it could hardly have been meant for her Damaged Nebraska Reaches Port.

Rockport, Mass.—The battleship Nebraska arrived here, after having been damaged slightly by running on an uncharted shoal near Point Judith. The Nebraska will go to Boston to dry dock for a thorough examination. The battleship went on the shoal on even keel, and scraped over several rocks. One bottom plate was started a few inches, and a compartment was leaking slightly after the accident, but an examination by divers disclosed that the damage was slight. The Missouri accompanied the Nebraska to this harbor. Although the place where the Nebraska struck is not shown on recent charts, it was indicated o nothers as far back as 1839. Later the mark was believed to be a mistake, and taken off the new charts.

Uncle Sam as Pied Piper.

Washington.—The government is to become a modern competitor of the Pied Piper of Hamlin as an exterminator of rats. But the magic of the Pied Piper flute is to be displaced by the most improved, modern, double-action, steel-jawed rat trap that the American inventive genius can furnish. Through Surgeon General Blue of the public health and marine hospital service, the government has asked for demonstrations of rat traps. The government wants traps to exterminate rodents which carry plague.

PANAMA CANAL BILL PASSED

RAILROAD-OWNED VESSELS PROHIBITING FROM USING WATERWAY.

Provision for Free Tolls, Which Was Fought in the Senate, Is Endorsed.

Washington.—The Panama canal bill, when it passed the senate, contained provisions which amend the Sherman anti-trust law and the law creating the interstate commerce commerce commission, and is beyond all odds the most important piece of legislation which has passed either house this session.

Briefly, the bill lodges in the hands of the interstate commerce commission the right to say when the ownership and control by railroads of steamships with which they might compete is detrimental to the public interest and must cease. It forbids railroad owned ships to use the canal. It closes the canal to ships owned by corporations who violate the Sherman anti-trust law.

Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia offered the amendment limiting the railroad legislation to the exclusion of railroad owned ships from the canal. This was carried by a vote of 49 to 18, and the senators who though the canal bill should not be the instrument of separating railroads from their steamship lines if they did not use the Panama canal at all thought they had won their fight. Their satisfaction was jarred ath the end of the day, however, when Senator Bourne obtained the adoption of an amendment giving the interstate commerce commission authority to compel a railroad to divest itself of the ownership of a steamship line if the ownership was found detrimental to the public interest through the suppression of competition.

400 KILLED BY EXPLOSION

Powder Magazine Attached to White House of Haiti Lets Go at Port-au-Prince.

Port-au-Prince, Haiti.—The national palace was blown up by a powder explsion and burned to the ground and the president of the republic of Haiti, Gen. Cincinnatus Leconte, killed. Members of his family, who were awakened by the terrific shock, found themselves almost surrounded by the flames, but managed to make their way to safety.

Many palace attendants were killed and it is estimated that the casualty list will reach 400 persons killed or injured.

The body of President Leconte was found on the iron bed on which he slept. The authorities are making arrangements for a national funeral.

The cause of the explosion of the powder magazine is not known.

At a joint meeting of the chamber and senate General Tancrede Auguste, senator and ex-minister of public works, was named as president.

CROP REPORTS ARE VERY ENCOURAGING

Improvement in Iron and Steel With Large Orders.

New York.—Bradstreet's review of trade says:

Trade and crop reports, barring corn, are even more encouraging than heretofore, improvement in trade has become more widespread, profits and demand for iron and steel are growing, collections are less difficult to make, money is firmer and finally, feeling throughout the surplus grain crop producing regions is better than it has been for several years.

Jobbers of dry goods, thanks to the presence of out-of-town buyers, have done an increased business. Trade in staple dress goods in various lines of cotton goods are being held at value by mill agents and there seems to have been a rather large demand for bleached goods. In short, buyers appear to be actuated by fears of an understocked market.

In iron and steel further improvement is manifested. Mill operations are active, the railways have ordered about 200,000 tons of rails for next year's delivery and the structural steel trade faces exceptionally large orders.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending August 8 were 221, against 224 last week, 208 in the like week of 1911, 231 in 1910, 219 in 1909 and 249 in 1908. Business failures in Canada for the week, 22 in number, contrast with 25 last week and 40 in the corresponding week last year.

Wheat, including flour, exports from the United States and Canada for the week ending August 8 aggregate 2,740,125 bushels, against 2,494,057 last week and 2,560,967 this week last year. For the six weeks ending August 8 exports are 14,765,141 bushels, against 13,221,342 in the corresponding period last year.

Corn exports for the week are 92,595 bushels, against 77,842 last week, and 635,781 in 1911. For the six weeks ending August 8 corn exports are 523,544 bushels, against 3,717,089 last year.

New York.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"The expansion in iron and steel continues with activity, especially marked in finished lines and with additional prices.

Mills are crowded with orders, while prominent rail manufacturers are booked up to next February. All equipment companies are busy while steel foundries are working at a higher rate than in many months. Greater activity apears in pig iron and steady though moderate price advances are noted. Considerable inquiries are out for foundry iron for shipment in the first quarter of 1913.

Trading in the dry goods markets shows steady expansion, numerous buyers being present. There is a marked absence of speculation, the enhanced values of cotton goods being entirely due to normal buying and the increased cost of production. Export trade is quiet, but shipments of cotton for the fiscal year just closed exceed those of the previous 12 months by 170,000,000 yards, although only 3,000,000 yards of this amount were due to the added trade, in addition to large customers.

In woolens and worsteds the staple dress goods trade is active at first hands and jobbers report a better business than for some time. Spring lines have been opened and advances are noted, ranging from 7 to 9 per cent.

Footwear manufacturers are busily engaged preparing shipments for August and September delivery. Mail orders are received in liberal volume. Aggregate business in shoe leathers is in good volume, especially in bottom stock. Supplies are limited in all tannages of sole and union backs are very firm in price.

Lady Augusta Gregory, the able and ardent apostle of the modern Irish movement, is fond of telling the following real Irish story:

"It was the wedding day of Pat and Bridget, and they were having a church wedding. It was a grand affair. Pat was dressed with patent leather shoes, white vest and flaming tie. Bridget shone attractively in many colors. The ceremony was over, and the happy pair walked down the aisle, out into the street, where a great crowd greeted them with delight.

"Once seated within the cab, Bridget leaned over to Pat and said, in a loud whisper, 'Och, Pat, if we could only have stood on the sidewalk and watched ourselves pass, wouldn't it have been hivin'?"

For several years past the political condition of the country, under the domination of the Republican and Democratic parties, has been such as to make many thinking men indulge the hope of the formation of a new party, strong and progressive that taking example from the methods of both of the old parties would avoid their errors and blunders and would diligently and earnestly strive to ameliorate the conditions under which we are living today.

Twenty years ago many of us hoped that the People's Party would answer all our expectations, and that it did accomplish much good is evidenced by the platforms of the Republican and Democratic parties of the present day, both of which have adopted several of the planks in the People's Party platform which twenty years ago they decided.

But the world is progressive, and platforms of twenty years ago do not meet the demands of today, the Republican and Democratic parties have failed to keep pace with the march of events, and consequently the formation of a new national party has been accomplished and the "Progressive Party" takes its place in the nation with strong probabilities of its accomplishing its mission.

Will the progressive people of Chilton allow this movement to go on without their aid and support, or will they join the "Progressives" to the advantage of themselves and their country? We hope they will turn out in large numbers to the meeting at Clanton on Friday, August 30th, and enroll themselves under the banner of the Progressive Party.

Are you interested in improving your lands by growing crops that require no cultivation, that are planted during September and October and harvested or turned under early enough in the spring for you to grow a good crop of corn or cotton on the same land without the use of nitrate of soda? If so, why not study the possibilities of such soil-improving plants as crimso clover, burr clover and hairy vetch?

Get your seed catalogue, study the descriptions of these plants and the claims made regarding them, then write to Prof. J. F. Duggar, Auburn, Ala., for his opinion regarding the use of them, also ask him to send you farmers bulletins on these plants and I think you will get busy.

We contemplate running a series of short articles on these plants for the next few issues. Look for them as they will be given with the view of helping to get you familiar with these soil-enriching plants. FARMER.

EX-CONGRESSMAN MAKES STATEMENT

FORMER REPRESENTATIVE SYD. NEY J. BOWIE TALKS ABOUT L. & N. FREIGHT RATES.

LOWER THAN OTHER ROADS

Southern Allowed to Charge $1.25 for Every $1.05 Allowed to Be Charged by L. & N.

To the Editor of the Birmingham Ledger:

I have noted your editorial of the 22nd inst., entitled "About Earnings and Rates." In this editorial you say: "With this showing the Louisville and Nashville insists upon restoring the 3 cent passenger rate and the old high freight rates in Alabama, while other roads, whose stock is selling far below that of the Louisville and Nashville, and whose earnings are much less, are satisfied to observe the rates fixed by the state." This statement is so inaccurate and misleading, that I feel in justice to you as well as to your numerous readers, that the truth in regard to the matter should be re-stated.

It is very evident that you have been grossly misinformed in regard to the facts. The other roads referred to in your editorial have not been satisfied to observe the rates fixed by the state for the Louisville and Nashville Railroad; upon the contrary, the Southern Railway, a very much larger and wealthier system, extending over a much greater mileage and backed by the most powerful set of capitalists in the world, is allowed by those statutes to which you refer, to charge $1.25 for every $1.05 allowed to be charged by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Alabama Great Southern, which has no branch mileage to speak of, whose business is concentrated upon a highly profitable through line whose gross and net earnings per mile are very much greater than those of the Louisville and Nashville, and whose investment per mile of line is much less, is allowed under these same statutes $1.20 for every $1.05 allowed to the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad, having in Alabama only one through main line, with much larger volume of business per mile of line, a road much greater in the aggregate in mileage, and in capital invested than the Louisville and Nashville, and which has never done one-tenth of the development work of the latter road, is allowed $1.20 for every $1.05 allowed the Louisville and Nashville Railroad under the statutes referred to.

The Seaboard Air Line, a great competitor in every respect, is allowed $1.25 under these same statutes, for every $1.05 allowed the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

As there are people, who do not know these facts or who, knowing it, persistently ignore the same in their public statements (of course, I do not include the Ledger in this statement), I refer you to the acts of the special session of 1907 (pp. 31-159 inclusive) and subsequent orders of the railroad commission of Alabama, in which the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad is transferred from Class 1 to Class 2, the Atlantic Coast Line from Class 1 to Class 3, and the Seaboard Air Line from Class 2 to Class 3.

In these statutes you will see that, with certain exceptions there noted, the railroads in Class 1, are allowed to charge 5 per cent above the standard rates of freight there fixed; the railroads in Class 2, 20 per cent above the standard rates there fixed; the railroads in Class 3, 25 per cent above the standard rates there fixed; and the railroads in Class 4, 50 per cent above the standard rates there fixed, (see particularly pp. 94, 103, 11, 119, 127, 136, 145 and 154 of the acts of the extra session of 1907.)

Moreover, it was testified, under oath, in the rate cases lately tried, and it has never been denied publicly, that the average rates voluntarily charged by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad are still lower than the average of rates fixed by the statute for the Southern Railway and other roads enjoying the special favors of the former state administration. Of course, in the vast multiplicity of rates fixed under varying conditions, many of them extending over a long period of years, it could not be stated accurately that every rate on any one road for a given distance is either lower or higher than every rate on either one of its competitors; but the well known historic fact is that it has long been the policy of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad to grant specially low freight rates and to specially encourage and develop the freight traffic, and in pursuance of this policy, its rates on the whole, taken as an average, always have been and are now lower than the average of the rates charged by the Southern Railway. The testimony to that effect was not controverted.

Moreover, the average of rates of the Louisville and Nashville railroad in Alabama are lower than the average of rates of all railroads in the state of Georgia. The persistent efforts to create a prejudice, and an unjust prejudice, against the Louisville and Nashville railroad by making comparison with a few short lines in the state of Georgia enjoying a peculiarly heavy traffic, cannot always deceive and mislead the people. It is well known that the rates referred to in Georgia, which are especially low, apply to less than one-twelfth of the mileage of that state. We persistently hear of isolated cases where conditions are wholly different. We do not hear from the critics of the Louisville and Nashville railroad who are trying to build up an unjust sentinent against it anything about the rates of the state of Georgia, taken as a whole, compared with the rates of the Louisville and Nashville railroad in Alabama, taken as a whole.

We hear a great deal about the heavy tonnage which the state of Alabama furnishes to the Louisville and Nashville railroad, but we do not hear anything about the fact that every ton moved in Georgia yields nearly four times as much revenue as every ton moved in Alabama.

We hear much about the fact of the great volume of business hauled in Alabama. We are not told that, although practically one-half the tonnage moved by the Louisville and Nashville railroad originates in Alabama, less than one-fourth of its revenue is derived from this state. We hear the word "tonnage" referred to as if it was all revenue—no allusion is made to the fact that tonnage creates expense as well as revenue.

You speak of the income of the Louisville and Nashville railroad as measured by its capital stock. It is doubtless unknown to the Ledger, although the fact is a matter of record and capable of certain proof, that the average dividend returns of the stockholders of the Louisville and Nashville railroad since its incorporation have been less than 2 1-2 per cent; that it has been wisely and economically managed since its organization in 1851, having been practically under one management since 1865; that every dollar of its earnings, outside of the very meagre return to its stockholders mentioned, has been put back in the property and used in the extension of its lines, and in the increase of its facilities and equipment, all tending to enable it better to discharge its duties and obligations as a public carrier. These earnings have never been squandered upon speculations in Wall street, but have been devoted to development purposes, a very large portion of which has been expended right here in Alabama, and particularly in Jefferson county. It may not be known to many, but the fact is that the Louisville and Nashville railroad owns today over four hundred miles of track, including side track, in this county alone, and it is building additional lines. These earnings have gone into surplus, and surplus belongs to the company just as much as the original capital invested.

The property of the company could not be reproduced today for twice the value of the capital stock in addition to the total outstanding issue of bonds. In years of panic and depression it cuts off dividends and reduces the salaries of its officials; in years of prosperity it has taken its surplus earnings and put them back into new improvements and extensions. It is entitled to an earning upon its surplus and upon its natural increase in values, just as much as it is upon its capital stock and its bonds. If by its energy, by its economy, by wise and prudent management and by far-seeing policy of development, it has gotten its stock where it is worth on the market $160.00 per share, as you state, it ought to be commended and encouraged instead of mercilessly condemned for the possession of these elemental virtues.

The fact that the road is a success, that it is well and prudently, economically and efficiently managed, is no reason why it should be the victim of unjust discrimination. When the fair value is taken today in Alabama, it is not earning a fair and just return from all of its business. It is not even now, on the average, charging as much as the Southern railway and other state-favorites, in whose behalf an unjust policy of discrimination has been placed on the statute books. Upon the contrary its freight rates, on the whole, are still lower than those of its principal competitors, notwithstanding the statutes, and this because the statutes mean one thing for the Southern Railway, and another for the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad does not expect a square deal from those who want special favors and do not care how they get them; it does expect it from that large body of citizens who seek the truth before they decide the question at issue, and who are willing to apply the rule of doing unto others as they would have others do unto them.

A GRAND BARBECUE.

On August 3rd there was a large barbecue at old Pilgrim's Rest church, about one and a half miles from Pletcher. About 2,000 people were present, from 20 miles around. There was speaking in the morning by Mr. Walter D. Seed, who gave a fine lecture. The barbecue was given for the benefit of the Woodmen of the World. There were 49 carcases which furnished meat enough to feed 3,000 people, but there was so much taken of the table and put in baskets that there were at least 100 people who never got a taste.

Messrs. J. M. Campbell, John Ousley and Edmon Chandler cooked the meat, but I heard that the men who managed the meat did not get any of the meat. It was 3 o'clock before we got any dinner. A shower came up about 12 o'clock and everybody got sprinkled, and about 3 o'clock we got dinner. Most of the people eat their dinners in their buggies. The poor people were so hungry they could not wait for grace to be said. The meat was taken off the carving table before the waiters could distribute it. There was a large stand there, also for the Woodmen.

Baled Hay Most Profitable

WHETHER you feed your hay or sell it, you profit most by baling it. Baled hay may be shipped where the price is highest. It takes up only one-fifth of the storage space required by loose hay. It retains its feeding value longer, and is easier to handle. These advantages more than offset the cost of baling, which is very small when done by an

International Hay Press

Motor or Horse-Driven

The International motor press is a combination of two machines in one, a hay press and a portable I H C engine for which you will find many other uses. The hay press works on the powerful toggle-joint principle, the power being applied through a pull, not a push. An adjustable bale tension assures bales of uniform weight. A roller tucker folds the loose ends of each charge well down into the bale, keeping it smooth and neat. The bale chamber is so low that bales can be tied by reaching over the machine.

The I H C pull-power press, made in one and two-horse sizes, is a similar press with a bed reach and horse power mechanism in place of the I H C engine. The reach is only four inches high, making it easy for the horses to step over. The horses are pulling no load when they cross the reach.

A self feeder is made for both the motor and horse-driven presses. Bale chambers are 14x18", 16x18" and 17x22" in size. See the I H C local dealer and have him show you all about I H C hay presses. Get catalogues and full information from him, or write us.

MARBLE VALLEY.

A few lines from Coosa county. Everybody enjoying good health as far as I know. Crops are fairly good. No cotton worms have been found in this section yet. I hope they will not come any more for it is troublesome and expensive to poison them, and not all know how to apply it.

I knew of a fellow who used paris green on his corn to kill the worm and killed his corn. He simply did not know how to use it. Arsenate of lead will not kill stuff. Three or four pounds to the acre it will kill the worm. If paris green is used equal amount of paris green and flour, four pounds to the acre after mixed.

I have used it and seen it used by others. Any one should be careful how he handles this, for it is very poisonous. On the agricultural farm where I spent two years, last year we saved our cotton crop by the use of poison. Farming is nice when properly conducted.

We should first learn to prepare our land by breaking early in fall and following with harrow. Next we should see if our seed we are going to plant has been thoroughly selected from the field.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

For the Hair

Are you so fortunate as to be well satisfied with your hair? Is it long enough, thick enough, rich enough? And your hair does not fall out? Well, well, that is good. But you may know of some not so fortunate. Then just tell them about Ayer's Hair Vigor. They will surely thank you after using it, if not before. Remember, it does not color the hair. Show the list of ingredients to your doctor. Let him decide their value. He knows.

IN MEMORY.

On July 21st, 1912, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Norris and took from our midst our loving mother and grand mother. She was seventy years of age. She leaves one son, three daughters, twenty-eight grand children and five great grand children to mourn her loss. She was a member of the Baptist church, a devout Christian and a loving mother and grand mother. To know her was to love her. We cannot call her back but live to meet her in that great beyond when we will all be gathered home where there will be no pain or sorrow in that sweet by and by. Remember, our loss is heaven's gain. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Corinth. She is gone but not forgotten.

SIMPLE MORNING WEDDING.

The many friends of Miss Charlotte Barrett, who spent the summer of 1910 with M. J. Barrett north of town, will be interested in the following item clipped from the Waterloo Courier, published in Waterloo, Iowa, July 17, 1912:

"A simple wedding ceremony was performed this morning at 9 o'clock at the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. John Bunyan Smith, pastor of the Walnut Street Baptist church, when Miss Charlotte Barrett and Mr. George Cranston, both of Waterloo, were joined in marriage. The bride wore a pretty gown of white voile with white lace trimmings, and a white hat with plumes and maline trimming and carried white roses. Miss Laura Anderson, of Rockford, Ill., and Mr. Jas. J. Cranston, of Waterloo, brother of the groom, were the attendants. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Barrett, 1128 Washington street, and has lived in Waterloo most of her life. She attended the West high school and for several years has been in Mrs. Woods' millinery store. The groom came here from Moretown, Can., and is employed as a machinist with the William Galloway company. Both the young people have many friends who will extend best wishes on their marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Cranston left this morning for a few days' wedding trip and will be at home after August 1st, at 904 Birch avenue.

CALOMEL MUST HURT YOUR LIVER.

Every Time You Take This Powerful Drug You Are in Danger. Take Dodson's Liver Tone Instead.

Calomel is made from mercury, and while mercury has many uses, it is a dangerous thing to swallow. If calomel stays in the system very long it salivates. Even when it works naturally, its after-effects are often bad.

The Upchurch Drug Co. has a liver medicine called Dodson's Liver Tone which is positively guaranteed to take the place of calomel. It stimulates the liver just enough to start it working, and does not make you sicker than ever—as calomel often does. Dodson's Liver Tone won't force you to stop eating or working after taking it. It is as beneficial for children as for adults.

SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy, the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrive in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion. In a stroll Betty takes with Hannibal they meet Bess Hicks, daughter of the overseer, who warns Betty of danger and counsels her to leave Belle Plain at once. Betty, terrified, acts on Bess' advice, and on their way their carriage it stopped by Slosson, the tavern keeper, and a confederate, and Betty and Hannibal are made prisoners. The pair are taken to Hicks' cabin, in an almost inaccessible spot, and there Murrell visits Betty and reveals his part in the plot and his object. Betty spurns his proffered love and the interview is ended by the arrival of Ware, terrified at possible outcome of the crime. Judge Price, hearing of the abduction, plans action. The Judge takes charge of the situation, and search for the missing ones is instituted. Carrington visits the judge and allies are discovered.

CHAPTER XXIII. (Continued.)

"And General Quintard never saw him—never manifested any interest in him?" the words came slowly from the judge's lips; he seemed to gulp down something that rose in his throat. "Poor little lad!" he muttered, and again, "Poor little lad!"

"Never once, sir. He told the slaves to keep him out of his sight. We all wondered, fo' you know how niggers will talk. We thought maybe he was some kin to the Quintards, but we couldn't figure out how. The old general never had but one child and she had been dead fo' years. The child couldn't have been hers no-how." Yancy paused.

The judge drummed idly on the desk.

"What implacable hate—what iron pride!" he murmured, and swept his hand across his eyes. Absorbed and aloof, he was busy with his thoughts that spanned the waste of years—years that seemed to glide before him in review, each bitter with its hideous memories of shame and defeat. Then from the smoke of these lost battles emerged the lonely figure of the child as he had seen him that June night. His ponderous arm stiffened where it rested on the desk, he straightened up in his chair and his face assumed its customary expression of battered dignity, while a smile at once wistful and tender hovered about his lips.

"One other question," he said. "Until this man Murrell appeared you had no trouble with Bladen? He was content that you should keep the child—your right to Hannibal was never challenged?"

"Never, sir. All my troubles began about that time."

"Murrell belongs in these parts," said the judge.

"I'd admire fo' to meet him," said Yancy quietly.

The judge grinned.

"I place my professional services at your disposal," he said. "Yours is a clear case of felonious assault."

"No, it ain't, sir—I look at it this-a-ways; it's a clear case of my giving him the damndest sort of a body beating!"

"Sir," said the judge, "I'll hold your hat while you are about it!"

Hicks had taken his time in responding to the judge's summons, but now his step sounded in the hall and throwing open the door he entered the room. Whether consciously or not he had acquired something of that surly, forbidding manner which was characteristic of his employer. A curt nod of the head was his only greeting.

"Will you sit down?" asked the judge. Hicks signified by another movement of the head that he would not. "This is a very dreadful business!" began the judge softly.

"Ain't it?" agreed Hicks. "What you got to say to me?" he added petulantly.

"Have you started to drag the bayou?" asked the judge. Hicks nodded. "That was your idea?" suggested the judge.

"Poor Little Lad!" He Muttered.

"No, it wa'n't," objected Hicks quickly. "But I said she had been actin' like she was plumb distracted ever since Charley Norton got shot—"

"How?" inquired the judge, arching his eyebrows. Hicks was plainly disturbed by the question.

"He spoke of it?"

"Yes, sir; him and me discussed it together."

The judge regarded Hicks long and intently and in silence. His magnificent mind was at work. If Betty had been distraught he had not observed any sign of it the previous day. If Ware were better informed as to her true mental state why had he chosen this time to go to Memphis?

"I suppose Mr. Ware asked you to keep an eye on Miss Malroy while he was away from home?" said the judge. Hicks, suspicious of the drift of his questioning, made no answer. "I suppose you told the house servants to keep her under observation?" continued the judge.

"I don't talk to no niggers," replied Hicks, "except to give 'em my orders."

"Well, did you give them that order?"

"No, I didn't."

"Mas'r, you know dat 'ar coachman George—the big black fellow dat took you into town las' evenin'? I jes' been down at Shanty Hill whar Milly, his wife, is carryin' on something scandalous 'cause George ain't never come home!" Steve was laboring under intense excitement, but he ignored the presence of the overseer and addressed himself to Slocum Price.

"Well, what of that?" cried Hicks quickly.

"Thar warn't no George, mind you, Mas'r, but dar was his team in de stable this mo'ning and lookin' mighty nigh done up with hard driving."

"Yes," interrupted Hicks uneasily; "put a pair of lines in a nigger's hands and he'll run any team off its legs!"

"An' the kerriage all scratched up from bein' thrashed through the bushes," added Steve.

"There's a nigger for you!" said Hicks. "She took the rascal out of the field, dressed him like he was a gentleman and pampered him up, and now first chance he gets he runs off!"

"Ah!" said the judge softly. "Then you knew this?"

"Of course I knew—wa'n't it my business to know? I reckon he was off skylarking, and when he'd seen the mess he'd made, the trifling fool took to the woods. Well, he catches it when I lay hands on him!"

"Do you know when and under what circumstances the team was stabled, Mr. Hicks?" inquired the judge.

"No, I don't, but I reckon it must have been long after dark," said Hicks unwillingly. "I seen to the feeding just after sundown like I always do, then I went to supper," Hicks vouchsafed to explain.

"And no one saw or heard the team drive in?"

"Not as I know of," said Hicks.

"Mas'r Ca'ington's done gone off to get a pack of dawgs—he 'lows hit's might' important to find what's come of George," said Steve.

Hicks started violently at this piece of news.

"I reckon he'll have to travel a right smart distance to find a pack of dogs," he muttered. "I don't know of none this side of Colonel Bates' down below Girard."

The judge was lost in thought. He permitted an interval of silence to elapse in which Hicks' glance slid round in a furtive circle.

"When did Mr. Ware set out for Memphis?" asked the judge at length.

"Early yesterday. He goes there pretty often on business."

"You talked with Mr. Ware before he left?" Hicks shook his head. "Did he speak of Miss Malroy?" Hicks shook his head. "Did you see her during the afternoon?"

"No—maybe you think these niggers ain't enough to keep a man stirring?" said Hicks uneasily and with a scowl. The judge noticed both the uneasiness and the scowl.

"I should imagine they would absorb every moment of your time, Mr. Hicks," he agreed affably.

"A man's got to be a hog for work to hold a job like mine," said Hicks sourly.

"But it came to your notice that Miss Malroy has been in a disturbed mental state ever since Mr. Norton's murder? I am interested in this point, Mr. Hicks, because your experience is so entirely at variance with my own. It was my privilege to see and speak with her yesterday afternoon; I was profoundly impressed by her naturalness and composure." The judge smiled, then he leaned forward across the desk. "What were you doing up here early this morning—hasn't a hog for work like you got any business of his own at that hour?" The judge's tone was suddenly offensive.

"Mr. Hicks," said the judge, urbane and gracious, "I believe in frankness."

"Sure," agreed Hicks, mollified by the judge's altered tone.

"Therefore I do not hesitate to say that I consider you a damned scoundrel!" concluded the judge.

Mr. Cavendish, accepting the judge's ultimatum as something which must debar Hicks from all further consideration, and being, as he was, exceedingly active and energetic by nature, if one passed over the various forms of gainful industry, uttered a loud whoop and threw himself on the overseer. There was a brief struggle and Hicks went down with the Earl of Lambeth astride of him; then from his boot leg that knightly scot flashed a horn-handled tickler of formidable dimensions.

The judge, Yancy and Mahaffy, sprang from their chairs. Mr. Mahaffy was plainly shocked at the spectacle of Mr. Cavendish's lawless violence. Yancy was disturbed, too, but not by the moral aspects of the case; he was doubtful as to how his friend's act would appeal to the judge. He need not have been distressed on that score, since the judge's one idea was to profit by it. With his hands on his knees he was now bending above the two men.

"What do you want to know, judge?" cried Cavendish, panting from his exertions. "I'll learn this parrot to talk up!"

"Hicks," said the judge, "it is in your power to tell us a few things we are here to find out." Hicks looked up into the judge's face and closed his lips grimly. "Mr. Cavendish, kindly let him have the point of that large knife where he'll feel it most!" ordered the judge.

"Talk quick!" said Cavendish, with a ferocious scowl. "Talk—or what's to hinder me slicing open your woozen?" and he pressed the blade of his knife against the overseer's throat.

"I don't know anything about Miss Betty," said Hicks in a sullen whisper.

"Maybe you don't, but what do you know about the boy?" Hicks was silent, but he was grateful for the judge's question. From Tom Ware he had learned of Fentress' interest in the boy. Why should he shelter the colonel at risk of himself? "If you please, Mr. Cavendish!" said the judge, nodding toward the knife.

"You didn't ask me about him," said Hicks quickly.

"I do now," said the judge.

"He was here yesterday."

"Mr. Cavendish—" again the judge glanced toward the knife.

"Wait!" cried Hicks. "You go to Colonel Fentress."

"Let him up, Mr. Cavendish; that's all we want to know," said the judge.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Colonel Fentress.

The judge had not forgotten his ghost, the ghost he had seen in Mr. Saul's office that day he went to the court house on business for Charley Norton. Working or idling—principally the latter—drunk or sober—principally the former—the ghost, otherwise Colonel Fentress, had preserved a place in his thoughts, and now as he moved stolidly up the drive toward Fentress' big white house on the hill with Mahaffy, Cavendish and Yancy trailing in his wake, memories of what had once been living and vital crowded in upon him. Some sense of the wreck that littered the long years, and the shame of the open shame that had swept away pride and self-respect, came back to him out of the past.

He only paused when he stood on the portico before Fentress' open door. He glanced about him at the wide fields, bounded by the distant timber lands that hid gloomy bottoms, at the great log barns in the hollow to his right; at the huddle of white-washed cabins beyond; then with his big fist he reached in and pounded on the door. The blows echoed loudly through the silent house, and an instant later Fentress' tall, spare figure was seen advancing from the far end of the hall.

"Who is it?" he asked.

"Judge Pride—Colonel Fentress," said the judge.

"Judge Price," uncertainly, and still advancing.

"I had flattered myself that you must have heard of me," said the judge.

"I think I have," said Fentress, pausing now.

"He thinks he has!" muttered the judge under his breath.

"Will you come in?" it was more a question than an invitation.

"If you are at liberty." The colonel bowed. "Allow me," the judge continued. "Colonel Fentress—Mr. Mahaffy, Mr. Yancy and Mr. Cavendish." Again the colonel bowed.

"Will you step into the library?"

"Very good," and the judge followed the colonel briskly down the hall.

Women Win High Honors.

Once more women have triumphed at the Royal academy. For the second time in three years the gold medal has been won by a female student, while of the fourteen prizes offered no less than ten have been carried off by women. In presenting these and congratulating Miss Margaret Williams on her brilliant achievement the president of the Royal academy paid high tribute to the perseverance and the talent of women artists; but again, we ask, why is it not recognized by the Royal Academy of Arts in the obvious way? In every way women show their fitness to compete with men for the honor of admission to membership and to election among the Royals, yet still they stand without the gate.—Lady's Pictorial.

ALABAMA PARAGRAPHS.

Florence.—A Wilson-Marshall club was organized here with a membership of about a hundred.

Decatur.—The special grand jury of the law and equity court in session returned fifty-two indictments.

Huntsville.—A mistrial resulted in the trial of Jim Lenox on a charge of violating the prohibition laws.

Huntsville.—Crop prospects in this section have been considerably improved by frequent showers. The rains came in good time. Corn had reached a critical stage and had gone without rain as long as it could without damage resulting. The corn crop is now said to be assured.

Greenville.—The Butler county borrd of commissioners met at the court house and opened bids for the building of the Greenville and Forest Home Road. The road is to be a model state highway. The contract was let to a contractor of Montgomery. Work will be begun within 30 days.

Anniston.—The committee appointed for the purpose have prepared and presented to President O. L. Stewart a program for the convention of the Pythians of the First district, which will be held in Oxford August 21. The convention, which will be the eleventh semi-annual one, promises to be largely attended. All the lodges in the district will be represented.

Anniston.—In the death of Wesley Bannister at his home in the Antioch settlement, below Oxford, Calhoun county lost one of its pioneer and probably its oldest citizen. Mr. Bannister was 98 years of age and was a modern illustration of the ancient patriarchs, whose immediate family was a host in itself. Besides a number of children he is survived by 78 grandchildren.

Pell City.—The recent order of Dr. Oates prison inspector, removing the prisoners of the Jefferson county jail to Gadsden has caused much discussion at this place as to what the sheriff will do with the prisoners he is compelled to carry from the jail here to Birmingham. Dr. Oates condemned the jail here on November 2 and demanded that the sheriff carry all the Prisoners to the Jefferson county jail.

Gadsden.—Attalla is coming to the front rapidly as an industrial center. The big cotton compress is nearing completion, and will be in operation next month. The Peacoock Iron Works plant probably will be located there, and announcements regarding this company are expected in a few days. Now the business men are talking of the need of a new hotel, the Alabama Great Southern hotel having been damaged by fire recently.

Birmingham.—The following letter sent out by Mrs. J. A. Rountree, Recorder of Crosses, U. D. C., is self explanatory:

The last date for the bestowal of Crosses of Honor being September 27th, next, it is necessary for all Confederate Veterans desiring same to apply to the president of the nearest chapter of Daughters of the Confederacy before August 25th. It is the earnest wish of the Daughters that every veteran in Alabama receive this little bronze badge in recognition of their heroic service, and, therefore, attention is called to the final date of the bestowal, that none shall be overlooked. If you know of any veteran who has not received a cross, kindly assist him to do so before the books are closed. Application papers must be secured from all U. D. C. chapter presidents, whether the veteran is a member of a U. C. V. camp or not. Please act promptly.

Montgomery.—With the approach of the hunting season, John H. Wallace, Jr., state game and fish commissioner, has issued warnings against infringement of the laws for protection of game and fish. He points out that the hunting of some game is absolutely prohibited, while there are laws against several methods of obtaining game and fish. He advises hunters to familiarize themselves with the law before going into the fields. The open season on game birds is as follows: Wild turkey gobblers, December 1 to April 1; quail, November 1 to March 1; doves, August 1 to March 1; swan, geese, brant, ducks, rails, coots, mud-hens, sandpipers, woodcocks and curlews, September 1 to March 1; snipe and plover, November 1 to May 1; pheasants and all imported game birds, December 1 to December 15.

Open season on buck deer is from November 1 to January 1; on squirrels, October 1 to March 1.

The law fixes a day's limit to one buck deer, two gobblers and twenty-five game birds.

Huntsville.—The annual reunion of the survivors of the Gurley troop of Confederate cavalry, who fought under Capt. Frank B. Gurley in the civil war will be held August 20 and 21, at the home of the former commander. The number of survivors of the original troop has grown pitifully small in recent years, but as many other veterans are bidden to the reunions, the event is generally attended by a considerable company of men, all of whom are lavishly entertained at Captain Gurley's home. The survivors come from many states.

A New York woman has inaugurated a new departure. She sent word to a number of dressmakers that she had so many dresses to make, of such and such materials, and so many others to be altered, and named the alterations to be made and asked for bids. She will probably accept the lowest bid, and this seems to open up a new field in dressmaking. "Poor Little Lad!" He Muttered.

SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy, the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrive in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion. In a stroll Betty takes with Hannibal they meet Bess Hicks, daughter of the overseer, who warns Betty of danger and counsels her to leave Belle Plain at once. Betty, terrified, acts on Bess' advice, and on their way their carriage it stopped by Slosson, the tavern keeper, and a confederate, and Betty and Hannibal are made prisoners. The pair are taken to Hicks' cabin, in an almost inaccessible spot, and there Murrell visits Betty and reveals his part in the plot and his object. Betty spurns his proffered love and the interview is ended by the arrival of Ware, terrified at possible outcome of the crime. Judge Price, hearing of the abduction, plans action. The Judge takes charge of the situation, and search for the missing ones is instituted. Carrington visits the judge and allies are discovered.

CHAPTER XXIII. (Continued.)

"And General Quintard never saw him—never manifested any interest in him?" the words came slowly from the judge's lips; he seemed to gulp down something that rose in his throat. "Poor little lad!" he muttered, and again, "Poor little lad!"

"Never once, sir. He told the slaves to keep him out of his sight. We all wondered, fo' you know how niggers will talk. We thought maybe he was some kin to the Quintards, but we couldn't figure out how. The old general never had but one child and she had been dead fo' years. The child couldn't have been hers no-how." Yancy paused.

The judge drummed idly on the desk.

"What implacable hate—what iron pride!" he murmured, and swept his hand across his eyes. Absorbed and aloof, he was busy with his thoughts that spanned the waste of years—years that seemed to glide before him in review, each bitter with its hideous memories of shame and defeat. Then from the smoke of these lost battles emerged the lonely figure of the child as he had seen him that June night. His ponderous arm stiffened where it rested on the desk, he straightened up in his chair and his face assumed its customary expression of battered dignity, while a smile at once wistful and tender hovered about his lips.

"One other question," he said. "Until this man Murrell appeared you had no trouble with Bladen? He was content that you should keep the child—your right to Hannibal was never challenged?"

"Never, sir. All my troubles began about that time."

"Murrell belongs in these parts," said the judge.

"I'd admire fo' to meet him," said Yancy quietly.

The judge grinned.

"I place my professional services at your disposal," he said. "Yours is a clear case of felonious assault."

"No, it ain't, sir—I look at it this-a-ways; it's a clear case of my giving him the damndest sort of a body beating!"

"Sir," said the judge, "I'll hold your hat while you are about it!"

Hicks had taken his time in responding to the judge's summons, but now his step sounded in the hall and throwing open the door he entered the room. Whether consciously or not he had acquired something of that surly, forbidding manner which was characteristic of his employer. A curt nod of the head was his only greeting.

"Will you sit down?" asked the judge. Hicks signified by another movement of the head that he would not. "This is a very dreadful business!" began the judge softly.

"Ain't it?" agreed Hicks. "What you got to say to me?" he added petulantly.

"Have you started to drag the bayou?" asked the judge. Hicks nodded. "That was your idea?" suggested the judge.

"No, it wa'n't," objected Hicks quickly. "But I said she had been actin' like she was plumb distracted ever since Charley Norton got shot—"

"How?" inquired the judge, arching his eyebrows. Hicks was plainly disturbed by the question.

"He spoke of it?"

"Yes, sir; him and me discussed it together."

The judge regarded Hicks long and intently and in silence. His magnificent mind was at work. If Betty had been distraught he had not observed any sign of it the previous day. If Ware were better informed as to her true mental state why had he chosen this time to go to Memphis?

"I suppose Mr. Ware asked you to keep an eye on Miss Malroy while he was away from home?" said the judge. Hicks, suspicious of the drift of his questioning, made no answer. "I suppose you told the house servants to keep her under observation?" continued the judge.

"I don't talk to no niggers," replied Hicks, "except to give 'em my orders."

"Well, did you give them that order?"

"No, I didn't."

"Mas'r, you know dat 'ar coachman George—the big black fellow dat took you into town las' evenin'? I jes' been down at Shanty Hill whar Milly, his wife, is carryin' on something scandalous 'cause George ain't never come home!" Steve was laboring under intense excitement, but he ignored the presence of the overseer and addressed himself to Slocum Price.

"Well, what of that?" cried Hicks quickly.

"Thar warn't no George, mind you, Mas'r, but dar was his team in de stable this mo'ning and lookin' mighty nigh done up with hard driving."

"Yes," interrupted Hicks uneasily; "put a pair of lines in a nigger's hands and he'll run any team off its legs!"

"An' the kerriage all scratched up from bein' thrashed through the bushes," added Steve.

"There's a nigger for you!" said Hicks. "She took the rascal out of the field, dressed him like he was a gentleman and pampered him up, and now first chance he gets he runs off!"

"Ah!" said the judge softly. "Then you knew this?"

"Of course I knew—wa'n't it my business to know? I reckon he was off skylarking, and when he'd seen the mess he'd made, the trifling fool took to the woods. Well, he catches it when I lay hands on him!"

"Do you know when and under what circumstances the team was stabled, Mr. Hicks?" inquired the judge.

"No, I don't, but I reckon it must have been long after dark," said Hicks unwillingly. "I seen to the feeding just after sundown like I always do, then I went to supper," Hicks vouchsafed to explain.

"And no one saw or heard the team drive in?"

"Not as I know of," said Hicks.

"Mas'r Ca'lington's done gone off to get a pack of dawgs—he 'lows hit's might' important to find what's come of George," said Steve.

Hicks started violently at this piece of news.

"I reckon he'll have to travel a right smart distance to find a pack of dogs," he muttered. "I don't know of none this side of Colonel Bates' down below Girard."

The judge was lost in thought. He permitted an interval of silence to elapse in which Hicks' glance slid round in a furtive circle.

"When did Mr. Ware set out for Memphis?" asked the judge at length.

"Early yesterday. He goes there pretty often on business."

"You talked with Mr. Ware before he left?" Hicks shook his head. "Did he speak of Miss Malroy?" Hicks shook his head. "Did you see her during the afternoon?"

"No—maybe you think these niggers ain't enough to keep a man stirring?" said Hicks uneasily and with a scowl. The judge noticed both the uneasiness and the scowl.

"I should imagine they would absorb every moment of your time, Mr. Hicks," he agreed affably.

"A man's got to be a hog for work to hold a job like mine," said Hicks sourly.

"But it came to your notice that Miss Malroy has been in a disturbed mental state ever since Mr. Norton's murder? I am interested in this point, Mr. Hicks, because your experience is so entirely at variance with my own. It was my privilege to see and speak with her yesterday afternoon; I was profoundly impressed by her naturalness and composure." The judge smiled, then he leaned forward across the desk. "What were you doing up here early this morning—hasn't a hog for work like you got any business of his own at that hour?" The judge's tone was suddenly offensive.

For no discernible reason Mr. Cavendish spat on his palms.

"Mr. Hicks," said the judge, urbane and gracious, "I believe in frankness."

"Sure," agreed Hicks, mollified by the judge's altered tone.

"Therefore I do not hesitate to say that I consider you a damned scoundrel!" concluded the judge.

Mr. Cavendish, accepting the judge's ultimatum as something which must debar Hicks from all further consideration, and being, as he was, exceedingly active and energetic by nature, if one passed over the various forms of gainful industry, uttered a loud whoop and threw himself on the overseer. There was a brief struggle and Hicks went down with the Earl of Lambeth astride of him; then from his boot leg that knightly soul flashed a horn-handled tickler of formidable dimensions.

The judge, Yancy and Mahaffy, sprang from their chairs. Mr. Mahaffy was plainly shocked at the spectacle of Mr. Cavendish's lawless violence. Yancy was disturbed, too, but not by the moral aspects of the case; he was doubtful as to how his friend's act would appeal to the judge. He need not have been distressed on that score, since the judge's one idea was to profit by it. With his hands on his knees he was now bending above the two men.

"What do you want to know, judge?" cried Cavendish, panting from his exertions. "I'll learn this parrot to talk up!"

"Hicks," said the judge, "it is in your power to tell us a few things we are here to find out." Hicks looked up into the judge's face and closed his lips grimly. "Mr. Cavendish, kindly let him have the point of that large knife where he'll feel it most!" ordered the judge.

"Talk quick!" said Cavendish, with a ferocious scowl. "Talk—or what's to hinder me slicing open your woozen?" and he pressed the blade of his knife against the overseer's throat.

"I don't know anything about Miss Betty," said Hicks in a sullen whisper.

"Maybe you don't, but what do you know about the boy?" Hicks was silent, but he was grateful for the judge's question. From Tom Ware he had learned of Fentress' interest in the boy. Why should he shelter the colonel at risk of himself? "If you please, Mr. Cavendish!" said the judge, nodding toward the knife.

"You didn't ask me about him," said Hicks quickly.

"I do now," said the judge.

"He was here yesterday."

"Mr. Cavendish—" again the judge glanced toward the knife.

"Wait!" cried Hicks. "You go to Colonel Fentress."

"Let him up, Mr. Cavendish; that's all we want to know," said the judge.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Colonel Fentress.

The judge had not forgotten his ghost, the ghost he had seen in Mr. Saul's office that day he went to the court house on business for Charley Norton. Working or idling—principally the latter—drunk or sober—principally the former—the ghost, otherwise Colonel Fentress, had preserved a place in his thoughts, and now as he moved stolidly up the drive toward Fentress' big white house on the hill with Mahaffy, Cavendish and Yancy trailing in his wake, memories of what had once been living and vital crowded in upon him. Some sense of the wreck that littered the long years, and the shame of the open shame that had swept away pride and self-respect, came back to him out of the past.

He only paused when he stood on the portico before Fentress' open door. He glanced about him at the wide fields, bounded by the distant timber lands that hid gloomy bottoms, at the great log barns in the hollow to his right; at the huddle of whitewashed cabins beyond; then with his big fist he reached in and pounded on the door. The blows echoed loudly through the silent house, and an instant later Fentress' tall, spare figure was seen advancing from the far end of the hall.

"Who is it?" he asked.

"Judge Price—Colonel Fentress," said the judge.

"Judge Price," uncertainly, and still advancing.

"I had flattered myself that you must have heard of me," said the judge.

"I think I have," said Fentress, pausing now.

"He thinks he has!" muttered the judge under his breath.

"Will you come in?" it was more a question than an invitation.

"If you are at liberty." The colonel bowed. "Allow me," the judge continued. "Colonel Fentress—Mr. Mahaffy, Mr. Yancy and Mr. Cavendish." Again the colonel bowed.

"Will you step into the library?"

"Very good," and the judge followed the colonel briskly down the hall.

Women Win High Honors.

Once more women have triumphed at the Royal academy. For the second time in three years the gold medal has been won by a female student, while of the fourteen prizes offered no less than ten have been carried off by women. In presenting these and congratulating Miss Margaret Williams on her brilliant achievement the president of the Royal academy paid high tribute to the perseverance and the talent of women artists; but again, we ask, why is it not recognized by the Royal Academy of Arts in the obvious way? In every way women show their fitness to compete with men for the honor of admission to membership and to election among the "forty, yet still they stand without the gate.—Leslie's Pictorial.

ALABAMA PARAGRAPHS.

Florence.—A Wilson-Marshall club was organized here with a membership of about a hundred.

Decatur.—The special grand jury of he law and equity court in session returned fifty-two indictments.

Huntsville.—A mistrial resulted in the trial of Jim Lenox on a charge of violating the prohibition laws.

Huntsville.—Crop prospects in this section have been considerably improved by frequent showers. The rains came in good time. Corn had reached a critical stage and had gone without rain as long as it could without damage resulting. The corn crop is now said to be assured.

Greenville. — The Butler county borrd of commissioners met at the court house and opened bids for the building of the Greenville and Forest Home Road. The road is to be a model state highway. The contract was let to a contractor of Montgomery. Work will be begun within 30 days.

Anniston.—The committee appointed for the purpose have prepared and presented to President O. L. Stewart a program for the convention of the Pythians of the First district, which will be held in Oxford August 21. The convention, which will be the eleventh semi-annual one, promises to be largely attended. All the lodges in the district will be represented.

Anniston.—In the death of Wesley Bannister at his home in the Antioch settlement, below Oxford, Calhoun county lost one of its pioneer and probably its oldest citizen. Mr. Bannister was 98 years of age and was a modern illustration of the ancient patriarchs, whose immediate family was a host in itself. Besides a number of children he is survived by 78 grandchildren.

Pell City.—The recent order of Dr. Oates prison inspector, removing the prisoners of the Jefferson county jail to Gadsden has caused much discussion at this place as to what the sheriff will do with the prisoners he is compelled to carry from the jail here to Birmingham. Dr. Oates condemned the jail here on November 2 and demanded that the sheriff carry all the Prisoners to the Jefferson county jail.

Gadsden.—Attalla is coming to the front rapidly as an industrial center. The big cotton compress is nearing completion, and will be in operation next month. The Peacocock Iron Works plant probably will be located there, and announcements regarding this company are expected in a few days. Now the business men are talking of the need of a new hotel, the Alabama Great Southern hotel having been damaged by fire recently.

Birmingham.—The following letter sent out by Mrs. J. A. Rountree, Recorder of Crosses, U. D. C., is self explanatory:

The last date for the bestowal of Crosses of Honor being September 27th, next, it is necessary for all Confederate Veterans desiring same to apply to the president of the nearest chapter of Daughters of the Confederacy before August 25th. It is the earnest wish of the Daughters that every veteran in Alabama receive this little bronze badge in recognition of their heroic service, and, therefore, attention is called to the final date of the bestowal, that none shall be overlooked. If you know of any veteran who has not received a cross, kindly assist him to do so before the books are closed. Application papers must be secured from all U. D. C. chapter presidents, whether the veteran is a member of a U. C. V. camp or not. Please act promptly.

Montgomery.—With the approach of the hunting season, John H. Wallace, Jr., state game and fish commissioner, has issued warnings against infringement of the laws for protection of game and fish. He points out that the hunting of some game is absolutely prohibited, while there are laws against several methods of obtaining game and fish. He advises hunters to familiarize themselves with the law before going into the fields. The open season on game birds is as follows: Wild turkey gobblers, December 1 to April 1; quail, November 1 to March 1; doves, August 1 to March 1; swan, geese, brant, ducks, rails, coots, mud-hens, sandpipers, woodcocks and curlews, September 1 to March 1; snipe and plover, November 1 to May 1; pheasants and all imported game birds, December 1 to December 15.

Open season on buck deer is from November 1 to January 1; on squirrels, October 1 to March 1.

The law fixes a day's limit to one buck deer, two gobblers and twenty-five game birds.

Huntsville.—The annual reunion of the survivors of the Gurley troop of Confederate cavalry, who fought under Capt. Frank B. Gurley in the civil war will be held August 20 and 21, at the home of the former commander. The number of survivors of the original troop has grown pitifully small in recent years, but as many other veterans are bidden to the reunions, the event is generally attended by a considerable company of men, all of whom are highly entertained at Captain Gurley's home. The survivors roster three plates.

Matters of Especial Moment to the Progressive Agriculturist

It is hard to keep a bad man up.

If it hurts too badly, smile harder!

The stingy man is invariably wasteful.

The weather is almost as hot as politics!

The hen is the most important work in the world.

Remember that the cure for gloom is "Drop a smile upon it!"

Sometimes a man is known by the company he tries to keep—and doesn't.

The bookworm is about as useless as the hookworm. It takes brains plus muscle to win.

Facts, like tacks, have heads and points, and if you don't always see them you may feel them.

When a man makes politics his profession he begins to cultivate the habit of seeing only one side of a thing.

If a man would lead a contented life, he must keep on the best of terms with his stomach, his conscience and his wife.

Worry causes melancholy, melancholy causes bad health, bad health causes bad temper and despondency and destroys good looks.

The young man who rolls a cigarette while asking a girl's father for her is either reckless or not anxious to receive a favorable answer.

Nowhere should contentment be more conspicuous than in rural communities, where far from ignoble strife for riches the residents pursue the even tenor of their way.

BENEFITS OF COLD STORAGE

Equalizes Values of Food Products and Regulates Supply to Conform to the Demand.

(By H. M. HASTINGS.)

Cold storage is an evil only when controlled by dishonest men. Properly conducted under lawful safeguards against the devices of unscrupulous speculators it equalizes values of food products to the consumer, regulates the supply to conform to the demand, provides a steady market and consequently larger profit to the producer and greater satisfaction to the consumer.

Co-operation among farmers, if widely extended and wisely managed, would do the same thing. It would prevent the rushing of crops to market when prices are low, provide capital to hold them, prevent ruinous competition, reduce the cost of selling and prevent losses through middlemen.

Co-operation among farmers has made less headway in the United States than in other countries. The two chief examples of its success here are the fruit trade of California and the co-operative creameries, of which some 2,200 are in operation at the present writing. To the writer's personal knowledge there is only one farmers' co-operative egg-marketing association in existence in the United States, and that has been kept up more from a desire to adhere to principle than because the members were financially reimbursed for their extra trouble.

About one-half the egg business of Denmark is handled by co-operative egg-export societies, which proves that such a method of egg marketing can be successfully carried on. The other half of the Danish egg trade is handled by private dealers, who are equally severe in rejecting bad eggs and maintaining the quality, from which we may judge that the system of egg handling by private dealers is also capable of putting out a high grade of eggs.

The loss in this country due to the actual spoiling of eggs constitutes an enormous waste, which could in a large measure be saved were eggs given reasonable care from the time of laying until they reached the consumer.

Pull Together.

We must have a new type of co-operation, not of the farmer against the merchant and the banker, nor of these against the farmer and against each other, but of all working together as a unit for the upbuilding of the community where all reside, and where the success of each means the success of all. The farmer cannot get along without the merchant; the banker cannot thrive unless the farmer does well; the merchant needs more people to feed and clothe that his profits may increase. Mutually they need each other; then why longer pull apart?

Good Co-operation.

Co-operation is the "working together" of the community. That co-operation which is an organization of men for the purpose of getting some other man in the community out of business is seldom justifiable, and always destructive of the co-operative spirit.

MUCH WASTE IS ELIMINATED

Of all foods, fruit is the most natural, wholesome and refined. The appeal it makes is not alone to appetite, but to taste, smell and the sense of beauty as well. One would imagine, then, that fruit should be of all things the easiest to market, and therefore the most profitable to cultivate.

That the real conditions should anywhere be the reverse of this affords one of the most striking illustrations of the fact that present methods of collecting and distributing the products of the soil are—except in a few instances of recent improvement—altogether askew and out of harmony with common sense.

Every year, while in the centers of population fruit of all kinds commands enormous prices, millions of dollars' worth perish on the farms where grown.

By that, by co-operative endeavor, all difficulties may be overcome, and fruit brought within the reach of consumers at prices which the multitude can afford, and yet high enough to yield good returns to the grower, is being demonstrated by the successes attending the operations of fruit growers' associations already organized.

Conspicuous among these is the California Fruit Growers' Exchange (formed twenty-three years ago) which now represents 6,000 growers, and which handles 60 per cent of the citrus fruits grown in California, and handles it in such a way that both waste at home and over-stocked markets at the points of distribution are alike practically eliminated.

Smaller but similar associations handle about 25 per cent more of the California crop, leaving only 15 per cent to be marketed by individuals.

The establishment of organizations of similar character in the middle west would eliminate much of the waste and loss which occurs annually in that section.

AID TO WISCONSIN BREEDERS

Many Co-operative Associations Formed to Improve High-Grade and Pure-Bred Stock

There are, in all probability, more co-operative breeders' associations in Wisconsin than in any other state in the Union. According to a census but lately made by the secretary of the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' association such organizations have been formed in all but 36 counties of the state and more are constantly being added to the list. Of this number 4 are of Jerseys, 19 of Holsteins and 22 of Guernsey breeders. In nine districts associations have been formed representing all breeds of live stock and in as many counties horse breeders' clubs are working for the improvement of this important branch of the industry. Each organization has for its purpose the production and improvement of high-grade and pure-bred live stock and the establishment of the most cordial relationships between its members in the practice of such methods of care and management as will insure the most successful and economical results.

LIME IS NOT A FERTILIZER

It Is Valuable for Correcting Conditions Unfavorable for the Growth of Certain Plants.

Lime is not a fertilizer itself, supplying plant food, like barnyard manure or commercial fertilizers. It is rather a modifier, valuable for correcting conditions unfavorable for the best growth of plants, like acidity or a tendency (in heavy clay soils) to puddle and bake after a rain. Most soils have a sufficiency of lime among their natural constituents; and it is well to be sure that there is a deficiency before applying it. A Michigan circular says: "Perhaps the most reliable indicator of the need of lime is the failure of clover to make a satisfactory stand when other conditions are favorable." If your land produces a good crop of clover, it needs no lime, whatever the crop desired. Lacking this indicator, the one sure way of determining whether a soil needs lime, is by a trial on a small patch of ground. "An application of lime over a whole field would be a waste of both time and money if the field were not in need of such an application."

Become Independent.

Now is the time, the accepted time for us to call our wives and children around us and say to them, I care not what course others may pursue, but as for us, free us from the all cotton farming and the credit system or let us starve. It is better by far for us to live hard for a year or so and then be free, independent American citizens than to be poor slaves all our lives.

Deal Squarely With Boys.

Keep the boys on the farm by dealing squarely with them. Give each of the youngsters a bit of ground for his own, then offer a prize to the one who gets the best results, then watch the young folks "dig in."

Pages for Hogs.

ECZEMA BEGAN BY ITCHING

Goldsboro, N. C.—"My daughter suffered from eczema. The trouble began in the ears by itching and running water, and later it formed pus and became very offensive. She began to scratch it and it went into sores. When the scabs came off there was a yellowish watery discharge. The outside of the ear was one solid sore. She tried several different remedies but received no relief. She had been troubled with it between one and two years when she finally began using Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment.

"She had not made but two treatments when all the scabs came off and the flesh just looked very red and dry. She kept up the treatment four or five weeks and she was entirely cured. It also cured other sores on the children, especially chapped feet on one of the little boys." (Signed) Mrs. W. H. Edgerton, Jan. 24, 1912.

In the Meantime.

There had been a row at recess time, and Miss Martin had called in all of the pupils, and had a sort of a school court, which lasted until time for school to be dismissed. The trouble had started with some of the older boys in a misunderstanding over a game. After hearing both sides of the question, she decided proper punishment for the combatants, and told them to remain in their seats after the others had gone home. She remembered something she wanted to say to a little boy who did not take part in the affray, and she turned to him and said:

"No, in the meantime, Guy—"

"I wasn't in it, Miss Martin," Guy interrupted hastily.

"Wasn't in what?" asked Miss Martin.

"Why, in the mean time," said the eight-year-old. — Mack's National Monthly.

Illiteracy in Germany.

According to the latest official reports, only three persons out of 10,000 in Germany are unable to read or write, while the proportion of illiteracy in Great Britain is 150 per 10,000, as against 770 per 10,000 in the United States. These figures are based on a comparison of illiteracy among some of the leading nations which has just been made and issued for free distribution by the United States Bureau of Education.

WERE NOT AT ALL DIVERTING

Serious-Minded Quaker Saw Nothing to Smile at in the Lighter Poems of Whittier.

The late Gertrdue Whittier Cartland, cousin of Whittier, the Quaker poet, presented an ideal picture of the saintly aged Quakeress. Her sweet, serene face, framed in its tight little bonnet, seemed to shine with clear, spiritual radiance; to hear her recite, in a voice of tranquil music, the hymns and graver poems of her famous relative was always delightful.

But she did not leave her cousin's lively sense of humor; and it was hard to tell whether this lack lessened or increased the effect, when in exactly the same grave, even tones, she occasionally read aloud some of the verse that he wrote, not for publication, but for the pleasure of his intimate circle. That was always light, frequently gay, sometimes fairly rollicking.

Her admiration for the writer made her try very hard to appreciate his fun; and she thought she did so; yet mirth seemed always as alien to her tongue as a red rosette pinned upon her dove-gray shoulder-shawl would have been to her costume. This incongruity was felt, doubtless, by another Friend, of even more serious mind than she, who once said to her reprovingly:

"The verses are harmless, and I perceive they are intended to be diverting; but they do not divert me, Gertrude, and I do not think they really divert thee. Be honest with thyself; if thee read them and did not know thy cousin Greenleaf wrote them, would thee not consider them extremely silly? Thee knows I mean no affront, and greatly admire thy cousin Greenleaf. Surely he is a great poet; but a great poet may sometimes write such silly stuff. And surely this time thy cousin has done it. Reflect and thee will agree with me."

She reflected—on the necessity of care in selecting an audience for a joke.—Youth's Companion.

What He Bought.

A Syracuse business man living in one of the suburbs decided to give up his spacious back yards to the raising of currants as a profitable side issue. So, wishing to absorb all the information he could acquire on the subject of the currant industry, he went down town one Saturday afternoon recently and returned with his arms full of books."

"Well, Teddy," inquired his enthusiastic spouse, as he dumped the volumes on the table, "did you succeed in getting what you wanted?"

"Sure, I did!" he replied, proudly pointing to the books. "I bought a whole year's edition of a standard work on current literature."—Exchange.

Hot Weather Drink.

Philip Hale, one of Boston's latter-day philosophers, recommends barley water as a more sensible drink for hot weather than "ice-cold" blends of waters, sirups, acids, gulped at the marble fountains. Mr. Hale's recipe for his favorite tipple is as follows:

"For three pints of water you will require a teacupful and a half of well washed pearl barley, four lumps of sugar and the thin rind and juice of one lemon. Pour boiling water over it, cover with a saucer and let it stand till cold; then strain again and again till clear, and pour into a jug."

A buttermilk fan adds:

"Then set the jug in a cool place and forget it."

Wanted Minute Evidence.

Orfla, the celebrated doctor, being examined as an "expert" on a capital trial, was asked by the president whether he could tell what quantity of arsenic was requisite to kill a fly. The doctor replied:—

"Certainly, M. le President. But I must know beforehand the age of the fly, its sex, its temperament, its condition and habit of body, whether married or single, widow or spinster, widower or bachelor. When satisfied on these points I can answer your question."

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientific for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng. and decide for themselves whether the New French Remedy "THERAPION" No. 1. No. 2 or No. 3 is what they require and have been seeking in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Therapion is sold by druggists or mail $1.00. FALAKTO.

Editor Union-Banner:

Dear Sir—As time is all my own this morning, I will try and pen you a few lines of interest. Health here is good at present. Nobody is at work much. All are going to meetings and having good times.

Our singing school just ceased Friday and we think there was great progress made, considering everything. The school was taught by Prof. L. T. Grant, he being a good teacher. Everything sure did go off nicely and any community desiring a good school (music school) would do well in securing his services.

Concord and Falako ball teams crossed bats on the former's grounds last Saturday morning. The score was 10 to 4 in favor of Falkato. Everybody was friendly and everything went off nicely.

Seems as i four correspondent from Verbena still upholds old times. Why he can do this, we don't see. Perhaps he is not enjoying the good "new times" as he would like. I have heard old people say back in old times you could get "booze" for 75c or $1 a gallon. Just to think of this one particular thing making some folks want old times again. Then, to hear them tell it, it is the old time religion that makes them thirst so much. What difference is there in the Bible of 60 years ago and today? Haven't you a preacher that will preach the Bible or have they improved on their work so much that they have dumbfounded you? Doesn't the Bible say everything is for the best? Don't you believe that everything is for the best? Surely there is no one climbed to the honor that makes them believe that they are wiser than their Creator. The Bible is the most popular book today. More were sold last year than the six most popular works combined. If it is claimed that the church has lost hold upon the masses which it had in the old days, statistics like these certainly give contradiction to the claim. If people do not go to church so much they have more churches to go to. The combination and co-operation among religious people, the manifold organizations of old and young men and women have added immensely to the force which the church exercises in every community, Sunday school, young people's society, Y. M. C. A. These and a hundred other forms of religious activity are now even in the good new times.

The boarding house has come to take the place of the cottage and the hotel is the devil's substitute for the home. Children are looked upon with disfavor and marriage is postponed until later in life. In all these charges there is a grain of truth. Yet there is too much stress laid upon the old man's advice, "Get money honestly if you can, but get money."

A royal maiden is wooed and won and the western world is as much interested in the love affair as ever past generation could have been. Hospitals spring by the magic of love's touch and reform schools supplement and farms substitute for penitentiaries. The crust of selfishness which covers humanity may be more glittering than in the lean years of long ago, but there is still the same heart throb beneath.

When these facts are pressed home upon the lovers of the ancients so that they must be admitted, the reply is that science and material comfort however great do not necessarily promote real happiness or genuine virtue.

Well, as space is getting lengthy I will ring off and come again.

I am still BLUE JAY.

BEAT 2.

Dear Editor:

It has been some time since you heard from me. I will give you a little sketch of Beat 2. Crops are progressing nicely since the refreshing rains we have had of late.

I want to say to the people of Beat 2 to look out for gray whiskers and patter shanks are out with petitions for stock law. Now boys you ought to know who reaps the benefit of such law, it is the merchants. Stock law will cause more trouble and take more feed. Now then if gray whiskers and patter shanks want stock law let them return to Georgia and have stock law of their own.

Oh, you boys of Mars Hill, you are great to play ball. Now see how far you can knock stock law. Dry Creek has plenty of water now. Gray whiskers comes riding through dry creek asking men to sign for him while patter shanks was gone the other way. Gray whiskers did not take time to put on his socks or he did not have any. One man said I will go take up a collection and get him a box of socks. Now boys, you want to be wide awake, with your eye upon the rail and your hand upon the throttle. Be sure and have sand on the track so you won't slip off before you get to the polls.

I will close with best wishes.

A FISH FROM DRY CREEK.

A vast amount of ill health is due to impaired digestion. When the stomach fails to perform its functions properly the whole system becomes deranged. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets is all you need. They will strengthen your digestion, invigorate your liver, and regulate your bowels, entirely doing away with that miserable feeling due to faulty digestion. Try it. Many others have been permanently cured—why not you? For sale by Alred Drug Co.

Plague of Snails.

A plague of snails is reported from the island of Ceylon, part of which is overrun by the animals. All vegetation is devoured as soon as it appears, and the natives have found it necessary to co-operate against them. Trenches are dug to stay their progress, and they are kept from the trees by making a circle on the ground around the trunks of cork or fiber, impregnated with tar or pitch.

Granulated Sore Eyes Cured.

"For twenty years I suffered from a bad case of granulated sore eyes," says Martin Boyd of Henrietta, Ky. "In February, 1903, a gentleman asked me to try Chamberlain's Salve. I bought one box and used about two-thirds of it and my eyes have not given me any trouble since." This salve is for sale by Alred Drug Co.

Doctors Use This for Ecz

Dr. Evans, Ex-Commissioner of Health, says: "There is almost no relation between skin diseases and the blood." The skin must be cured through the skin. The germs must be washed out, and so salves have long ago been found worthless. The most advanced physicians of this country are now agreed on this, and are prescribing a wash of wintergreen, thymol and other ingredients for eczema and all other skin diseases. This compound is known as D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

Dr. Holmes, the well known skin specialist writes: "I am convinced that the D.D.D. Prescription is as much a specific for eczema as quinine for malaria. We have been prescribing the D.D.D. Remedy for years."

We ourselves vouch for the D.D.D. Prescription for eczema and guarantee that it will take itch the instant you apply

If you are suffering from skin trouble we would like come to our store, for we agency of this remedy years that we can tell D.D.D. Prescription and eczema. In fact, we are so D.D.D. will do for you that glad to let you have a $1 b guarantee that it will cost unless you find that it For that matter a trial ought to be enough to sho the merits of the remedy.

CRIMSON CLOVER.

Crimson clover is an annual soil building plant that can be grown on almost any soil in this county by sowing with the seed 200 to 500 lbs of moist top soil from where crimson clover, red clover, white clover hop or rabbit foot clover has grown successfully during the previous year the use of the soil referred to above is to insure the inoculation which any nitrogen gathering plant has to have to grow successfully

A good dressing of stable manure is sometimes used instead of the soil, as above, to inoculate for the clovers but the soil is better.

Without inoculation crimson clover is almost a sure failure, but when the land is well inoculated it is a well paying crop.

Crimson clover may be sown between your corn, cotton, or cowpea rows at the rate of 15 pounds per acre and harrowed in during September and the first half of October, or the land may be well plowed and harrowed till fine and the seed sown and the harrow run lightly to cover the seed.

The crop may be used in many ways all of which are good.

1. It furnishes a good winter and early spring cover crop,

2. It gathers nitrogen from the air and stores it in its roots.

3. It makes a pasture during March and April that can't be excelled.

4. When it is desired to use the crop for hay it can be saved early enough for the land to be planted to corn, cotton, or other crops.

5. When cut for hay the land is left in much better condition than when left bare all winter.

6. A good crop of crimson clover plowed under about April the first is worth a ton of 10-2-2 guano to the acre.

Write Prof. J. F. Duggar, Auburn, Ala. for press bulletin No. 30 and bulletin No. 147; study them and plant at least a small patch before the middle of October.

THE COTTON WORM

The cotton worm or caterpillar is reported to have made its appearance on several farms near Clanton, and is rather numerous in patches. Unless it is checked in time the caterpillar is likely to become a menace to the crop, but we are assured that a prompt application of arsenate of lead is a certain preventative of the ravages of this insect. With cotton from two to three weeks later than last year it is necessary to keep a vigilant look out for the first appearance of this pest, and as soon as it shows up at once stop its mischief. Stop it now, keep the caterpillar from young cotton and there will be no trouble with it later.

ENTERPRISE

Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Robinson have been on the sick list for the past week, also Miss Fannie Yeargan; hope they will soon be up and about. Sunday school at Prospect is still improving. Several of the Evergreen people visited our Sunday school Sunday; was very glad to have them with us; hope they will come again. The farmers are preparing to harvest their crops. I notice some cotton opening; we will have to go to picking pretty soon. Mr. James Popwell is having a new house erected. Mr. H. C. Vance was carried to Montgomery last Wednesday to undergo an operation for appendicitis; hope he will be able to come home soon. There will be singing and preaching at Bethany next Sunday morning. The young people here are expecting a grand time next Friday at Bethelem at the close of Prof. C. N. Oden's school.

Prof. B. F. Boockholdt is in Montgomery for the summer season.

Several of the young folks here went to Evergreen Sunday evening and reported a nice time. People do have good times at Evergreen. Well, the people are about to get the roads in shape where they can travel them. W. T. R.

MASS CONVENTION CALL.

A mass convention of the republiean party of Chilton County, Alabama, is hereby called to meet at the Courthouse in Clanton at 10 0' Clock A. M. on Friday, August 39th, 1912.

All the qualified voters of Chilton County, who believe in the principals of the Republician party, are cordially invited to participate in said mass convention.

Done by order of Republician Executive Committee.

M. D. Foshee, Chairman,
J. D. Collins. Secretary.

The following petition, in a hurried canvass of the county, was circulated, and in a few days received the signatures of 500 voters of the county which, from lack of space and time, we are unable to publish.

We, the qualified voters of Chilton County, Ala., do hereby call a Mass Convention to meet at Clanton on August 30th, at 12 o! clock, noon, for the purpose of organizing a Progressive Party to conform to the Chicago Progressive Convention of August 5, 1912, and to nominate a County ticket if deemed advisable.

DRY VALLEY.

Health of this community is good. The meeting closed at Erven Saturday with seven conversions. Everybody declared it was the best meeting there has been there in several years. Brother Cunningham was Aldrich's assistant and everybody fell in love with the little preacher, especially the girls.

Miss Allie Mae Arlald spent the week with her cousins, Miss Willie Mae and Etta Sample.

Miss Ora Prestridge spent Monday night with Miss Mattie Bean.

Mr. Flinn Martin and daughter, Miss Dovie, and Miss Ethel Jones spent the week with A. P. Bean's family and took in the meeting and the Dry Valley days. Sure did hate to see them leave.

Mr. Howard McGaughly and sister, Effie, spent the first of the week with their sister, Mrs. George Reid.

Mr. Arthur Abbott and sister Katie, visited their sister Mrs. W. A. Reid Wednesday and Thursday.

On Thursday morning Mr. Arthur Abbott and W. H. Mitchell and R. E. Reid started to that great city of Montevallo and when they got in front of Mr. N. B. Robinson's house Mr. Abbott's mule fell down with him and fell on him right in the mud and he sure was the muddiest kid you ever saw.

Curious Accident.

A most curious accident occurred, recently, in Albany, N. Y., when a motorman lost control of a car going down a hill. When it reached Broad street it left the track, overturned and crashed into a three-story dwelling. Seven passengers and the motorman were injured, though none fatally. The car smashed into a bedroom, where a man, his wife and child were sleeping. They were showered with plaster and broken glass from the window, but were uninjured.

MR. JAMES NIX DEAD.

A good man, a respected citizen of Macedonia is gone. Mr. James Nix spent his life here. He was harmless and quiet. His body was laid away by loving hands in Macedonia cemetery on the 7th. Mr. R. M. Honeycutt conducted the burial service.

Like the dead billions of the past Mr. Nix has fallen. But in the great plan of the ages provision is made for the return of the captives from the prison house of death from the infant to the old man or old lady, and looking into the future we think of the glorified saints, the great company before the throne. Perfect men and women on the new earth and in some of those happy positions we believe Mr. Nix will be found. Alas! he is gone, but his identity is not lost and when restored will have a body suited to his environments, will still be James Nix. We tender our sympathy to the bereaved family.

Forests of Scotland.

Scotland contains a considerable number of well preserved and imposing forests, cared for and protected for centuries. One of these forests contains more than 5,000 acres, with many trees more than three feet in diameter.

D. C. Bybee, teaming contractor living at 669 Keeling Court, Canton, Ill., is now well rid of a severe and annoying case of kidney trouble. His back pained and he was bothered with headaches and dizzy spells. "I took Foley Kidney Pills just as directed and in a few days I felt much better. My life and strength seemed to come back, and I sleep well. I am now all over my trouble and glad to recommend Foley Kidney Pills." Try them.

THORSBY.

Last week one evening the young people surprised the bride and groom and all enjoyed the hospitality of the home.

Quite a number of the young people went to Jemison last week to the dance.

Mrs. Mastin and family have moved to New Decatur where the doctor has located.

Mr. Carl Peterson left for Indiana last Friday. The young people had a surprise on him the last evening he spent in Thorsby.

Mr. Calvin Pugh spent Sunday in Thorsby.

Mrs. Ranson formerly a resident of Thorsby, is the guest of Mrs. Nickelson.

Sunday afternoon Pastor Trosper went out to Pates Chapel and gave a short but very interesting talk to the boys and girls. He will preach there on the first Sunday in September. A good work is being done in the Sunday School there.

Mr. J. J. Stanley is putting up his new cotton gin.

Mr. Sam Collins is leaving Thorsby. He will have a public sale on Thursday.

The school has bought the property known as the Engh property and will use it for a dormitory for the boys.

A room has been rented for a dance hall. There will be a dance every Friday night.

CROSS ROADS BEAT 10.

As I have been silent a long time I will step in with a few words if the Editor does not object.

Health of our community is very good at present. Everybody has been enjoying themselves going to protracted meetings, but as the protracted meetings are about over and fodder pulling time is here, I guess people will have to get out and try working again. Our protracted meeting began on Saturday before the second Sunday in August and closed on the following Friday night. The preaching was done by Rev. J. D. Hughes, Rev. Benjamin Hughes and Rev. T. J. Deason. The meeting resulted in thirty-three additions to the church. It was one of the best revivals ever held at Chestnut Creek though it is a very old church.

The literary school at Cross Roads is progressing nicely under the management of Prof. J. D. Weldon. The school was small last week on account of the meeting at Chestnut Creek.

Prof. L. T. Grant is to begin a singing school at Chestnut Creek Church on Tuesday, August 20th to continue for a term of 20 days. We hope all who can will attend.

Mr. Henry Hughes of Birmingham visited relatives near Cooper last week and attended the meeting. Mr. Harvey Foshee spent last week with relatives and friends near Cooper.

Rev. and Mrs. J. D. Hughes visited Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Yates, Jr., Thursday.

If that somebody got disappointed last Sunday but we must not get discouraged but keep on trying and see if you can't find where the trouble is.

Now, Mr. Blue Jay, allow me to congratulate you on your answer to your opponent from Verbena. I think you are right about new times being better in almost every way. So stand up to his face and if you need help just holler.

Guess I'd better quit writing and cool awhile as the weather is exceedingly warm.

I remain always, yours respectfully,
"UNCLE PETE."

VERBENA.

On the 21st of July the Lord called Sister Nancy Norris to her great reward, after suffering for some time patiently. She had reached her 71st year and had been a member of the Missionary Baptist Church for more than 40 years. Her life was a shining light unto all that knew her. All were sad to give her up. She was a deaconess and had walked worthily of her vocation wherewith she had been called. She leaves one son and three daughters and a number of grand children, together with many others to say good by. By the grace of God we will meet you on the eternal shore, where mother and father and children can dwell together forever more. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Corinth, her home church in the presence of a large number of people. Sweet rest for them that fall asleep in Jesus. Sleep on Mamma, until the trump of God shall sound and then there shall be a reunion of spirit and body to dwell with God forever. May this promise comfort our sad hearts.

EAST RANDOLPH.

Saving fodder is all the go just now.

J. D. Atchison has secured a position in the mercantile business at Randolph. Success to him.

Mr. James Nix, a life long resident of East Randolph, died on the 6th. A good citizen is gone.

Revival services at the Erven school house closed Saturday evening. Revs. Carleton and Crumpton were in charge. We have not heard that any one secured salvation. A full salvation is the genuine old time religion. Fully saved means to cut down and destroy the tree of sin. Not just cut off a few branches, but the whole tree that gets all the poison branches of a sinful life—foolish, pride, love of superflus dress, love of narcotics, hatred, envy, intemperance, indeed the whole list. Makes the young convert a new creature. Kills sectarianism. Makes them clean and pure. Means deliverance from the love and dominion of sin. Yes, they pay the price, measure to the Bible standard and are of the overcoming class who are to inhabit the throne or divine government to judge the world and angels. Parents, awake to your children's interests.

Prof. T. C. Jackson of Collins chapel closed a very successful song service here on the 11th. His pupils advanced rapidly. The professor endeared himself to the people here. He is quite a painstaking teacher. We commend him to any class needing his services. Had a good singing here Sunday afternoon. Messrs. Hodgens and Waldrup were directors. Church service next Sunday at the Waldrup school house at 10:30 a. m. Scripture study will be in Luke 4:16-30. Deliverance to the captives in part along the line of the coming kingdom or its exaltation, the advance light of which is now causing a commotion in the nations, stirring the labor world, breaking in on religious denominations, separating the true church from the tares, it being the harvest or end of the present dispensation. Success to the Union-Banner. Long may it wave.

MARBLE VALLEY

Editor Union and Banner:—I like to hear from all parts of the country. I sure do appreciate seeing the people take so much interest in theoretical and practical farming. Some recommend a lot of fertilizer to be used. That is alright, we must recommend frequently stirring of soil. We may put our fertilizer down in a clean place, free of grass or other vegetation and plant our seed and don't stir the soil, we may expect a little yield. There is a lot of plant food in the earth, some has more than others. The only way for the plant roots to get it is by frequently stirring the soil. Most of us farmers quit working our crops too soon. Of course the sun is hot; some will say my cotton is met in the middle I cannot plow, for breaking it. Have your rows wider according to the strength of your land. We go out in the cotton fields in August and it has sheded a host of squares. We will say the insects are bad. not every time so, the trouble is it did not have plant food to support them.

Has That Been Your Experience Taking Calomel for Constipation? Try Dodson's Liver-Tone Next Time.

Many people take calomel to cure constipation, and it does cure it for one day but two or three days later they are sicker than ever. That is one of the after-effects of calomel.

This is the reason why The Upchurch Drug Co.'s store will not guarantee calantee Dodson's Liver-Tone to be a perfect substitute for calomel. Dodson's Liver-Tone will cure constipation and bilious attacks and keep them cured, by stimulating and toning-up the liver to do its best work. It is a vegetable liquid with a pleasant taste and is harmless to children as well as grown people. It livens up the liver by natural methods, does not act so strongly as to weaken the body, but is safe and sure just the same. You can buy a bottle today from The Upchurch Drug Co. with the assurance of your money back if it fails in your case.

MR. JAMES NIX DEAD.

A good man, a respected citizen of Macedonia is gone. Mr. James Nix spent his life here. He was harmless and quiet. His body was laid away by loving hands in Macedonia cemetery on the 7th. Mr. R. M. Honeycutt conducted the burial service.

Like the dead billions of the past Mr. Nix has fallen. But in the great plan of the ages provision is made for the return of the captives from the prison house of death from the infant to the old man or old lady, and looking into the future we think of the glorified saints, the great company before the throne. Perfect men and women on the new earth and in some of those happy positions we believe Mr. Nix will be found. Alas! he is gone, but his identity is not lost and when restored will have a body suited to his environments, will still be James Nix. We tender our sympathy to the bereaved family.

HIS FRIEND.

Forests of Scotland.

Scotland contains a considerable number of well preserved and imposing forests, cared for and protected for centuries. One of these forests contains more than 5,000 acres, with many trees more than three feet in diameter.

D. C. Bybee, teaming contractor living at 669 Keeling Court, Canton, Ill., is now well rid of a severe and annoying case of kidney trouble. His back pained and he was bothered with headaches and dizzy spells. "I took Foley Kidney Pills just as directed and in a few days I felt much better. My life and strength beemed to come back, and I sleep well. I am now all over my trouble and glad to recommend Foley Kidney Pills." Try them.

THORSBY.

Last week one evening the young people surprised the bride and groom and all enjoyed the hospitality of the home.

Quite a number of the young people went to Jemison last week to the dance.

Mrs. Mastin and family have moved to New Decatur where the doctor has located.

Mr. Carl Peterson left for Indiana last Friday. The young people had a surprise on him the last evening he spent in Thorsby.

Mr. Calvin Pugh spent Sunday in Thorsby.

Mrs. Ranson formerly a resident of Thorsby, is the guest of Mrs. Nickelson.

Sunday afternoon Pastor Trosper went out to Pates Chapel and gave a short but very interesting talk to the boys and girls. He will preach there on the first Sunday in September. A good work is being done in the Sunday School there.

Mr. J. J. Stanley is putting up his new cotton gin.

Mr. Sam Collins is leaving Thorsby. He will have a public sale on Thursday.

The school has bought the property known as the Engh property and will use it for a dormitory for the boys.

A room has been rented for a dance hall. There will be a dance every Friday night.

THE TWINS.

CROSS ROADS BEAT 10.

As I have been silent a long time I will step in with a few words if the Editor does not object.

Health of our community is very good at present. Everybody has been enjoying themselves going to protracted meetings, but as the protracted meetings are about over and fodder pulling time is here, I guess people will have to get out and try working again. Our protracted meeting began on Saturday before the second Sunday in August and closed on the following Friday night. The preaching was done by Rev. J. D. Hughes, Rev. Benjamin Hughes and Rev. T. J. Deason. The meeting resulted in thirty-three additions to the church. It was one of the best revivals ever held at Chestnut Creek though it is a very old church.

The literary school at Cross Roads is progressing nicely under the management of Prof. J. D. Weldon. The school was small last week on account of the meeting at Chestnut Creek.

Prof. L. T. Grant is to begin a singing school at Chestnut Creek Church on Tuesday, August 20th to continue for a term of 20 days. We hope all who can will attend.

Mr. Henry Hughes of Birmingham visited relatives near Cooper last week and attended the meeting. Mr. Harvey Foshee spent last week with relatives and friends near Cooper.

Rev. and Mrs. J. D. Hughes visited Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Yates, Jr., Thursday.

If that somebody got disappointed last Sunday but we must not get discouraged but keep on trying and see if you can't find where the trouble is.

Now, Mr. Blue Jay, allow me to congratulate you on your answer to your opponent from Verbena. I think you are right about new times being better in almost every way. So stand up to his face and if you need help just holler.

Guess I'd better quit writing and cool awhile as the weather is exceedingly warm.

I remain always, yours respectfully,

"UNCLE PETE."

VERBENA.

On the 21st of July the Lord called Sister Nancy Norris to her great reward, after suffering for some time patiently. She had reached her 71st year and had been a member of the Missionary Baptist Church for more than 40 years. Her life was a shining light unto all that knew her. All were sad to give her up. She was a deaconess and had walked worthily of her vocation wherewith she had been called. She leaves one son and three daughters and a number of grand children, together with many others to say good by. By the grace of God we will meet you on the eternal shore, where mother and father and children can dwell together forever more. She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Corinth, her home church in the presence of a large number of people. Sweet rest for them that fall asleep in Jesus. Sleep on Mamma, until the trump of God shall sound and then there shall be a reunion of spirit and body to dwell with God forever. May this promise comfort our sad hearts.

EAST RANDOLPH.

Saving fodder is all the go just now.

J. D. Atchison has secured a position in the mercantile business at Randolph. Success to him.

Mr. James Nix, a life long resident of East Randolph, died on the 6th. A good citizen is gone.

Revival services at the Erven school house closed Saturday evening. Revs. Carleton and Crumpton were in charge. We have not heard that any one secured salvation. A full salvation is the genuine old time religion. Fully saved means to cut down and destroy the tree of sin. Not just cut off a few branches, but the whole tree that gets all the poison branches of a sinful life—foolish, pride, love of superflus dress, love of narcotics, hatred, envy, intemperance, indeed the whole list. Makes the young convert a new creature. Kills sectarianism. Makes them clean and pure. Means deliverance from the love and dominion of sin. Yes, they pay the price, measure to the Bible standard and are of the overcoming class who are to inhabit the throne or divine government to judge the world and angels. Parents, awake to your children's interests.

Prof. T. C. Jackson of Collins chapel closed a very successful song service here on the 11th. His pupils advanced rapidly. The professor endeared himself to the people here. He is quite a painstaking teacher. We commend him to any class needing his services. Had a good singing here Sunday afternoon. Messrs. Hodgens and Waldrup were directors. Church service next Sunday at the Waldrup school house at 10:30 a. m. Scripture study will be in Luke 4:16-30. Deliverance to the captives in part along the line of the coming kingdom or its exaltation, the advance light of which is now causing a commotion in the nations, stirring the labor world, breaking in on religious denominations, separating the true church from the tares, it being the harvest or end of the present dispensation. Success to the Union-Banner. Long may it wave.

MARBLE VALLEY

Editor Union and Banner:—I like to hear from all parts of the country. I sure do appreciate seeing the people take so much interest in theoretical and practical farming. Some recommend a lot of fertilizer to be used. That is alright, we must recommend frequently stirring of soil. We may put our fertilizer down in a clean place, free of grass or other vegetation and plant our seed and don't stir the soil, we may expect a little yield. There is a lot of plant food in the earth, some has more than others. The only way for the plant roots to get it is by frequently stirring the soil. Most of us farmers quit working our crops too soon. Of course the sun is hot; some will say my cotton is met in the middle I cannot plow, for breaking it. Have your rows wider according to the strength of your land. We go out in the cotton fields in August and it has sheded a bout of squares. We will say the insects are bad, not every time so, the trouble is it did not have plant food to support them.

Has That Been Your Experience Taking Calomel for Constipation? Try Dodson's Liver-Tone Next Time.

Many people take calomel to cure constipation, and it does cure it for one day but two or three days later they are sicker than ever. That is one of the after-effects of calomel.

This is the reason why The Upchurch Drug Co.'s store will not guarantee calantee Dodson's Liver-Tone to be a perfect substitute for calomel. Dodson's Liver-Tone will cure constipation and billous attacks and keep them cured, by stimulating and toning-up the liver to do its best work. It is a vegetable liquid with a pleasant taste and is harmless to children as well as grown people. It livens up the liver by natural methods, does not act so strongly as to weaken the body, but is safe and sure just the same. You can buy a bottle today from The Upchurch Drug Co. with the assurance of your money back if it fails in your case.

SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrises, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy, the grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrive in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion. In a stroll Betty takes with Hannibal they meet Bess Hicks, daughter of the overseer, who warns Betty of danger and counsels her to leave Belle Plain at once. Betty, terrified, acts on Bess' advice, and on their way their carriage it stopped by Slosson, the tavern keeper, and a confederate, and Betty and Hannibal are made prisoners. The pair are taken to Hicks' cabin, in an almost inaccessible spot, and there Murrell visits Betty and reveals his part in the plot and his object. Betty spurns his proffered love and the interview is ended by the arrival of Ware, terrified at possible outcome of the crime. Judge Price, hearing of the abduction, plans action. The Judge takes charge of the situation, and search for the missing ones is instituted. Carrington visits the judge and allies are discovered. Judge Price visits Colonel Fentress, where he meets Yancy and Cavendish.

CHAPTER XXIV. (Continued).

When they entered the library Fentress turned and took stock of his guests. Mahaffy he had seen before; Yancy and Cavendish were of course strangers to him, but their appearance explained them; last of all his glance shifted to the judge. He had heard something of those activities by means of which Slocum Price had striven to distinguish himself, and he had a certain curiosity respecting the man. It was immediately satisfied. The judge had reached a degree of shabbiness seldom equaled, and but for his mellow, effulgent personality might well have passed for a common vagabond; and if his dress advertised the state of his finances, his face explained his habits. No misconception was possible about either.

"May I offer you a glass of liquor?" asked Fentress, breaking the silence. He stepped to the walnut center-table where there was a decanter and glasses. By a gesture the judge declined the invitation. Whereat the colonel looked surprised, but not so surprised as Mahaffy. There was another silence.

"I don't think we ever met before?" observed Fentress. There was something in the fixed stare his visitor was bending upon him that he found disquieting, just why, he could not have told.

But that fixed stare of the judge's continued. No, the man had not changed—he had grown older certainly, but age had not come ungracefully; he became the glossy broadcloth and spotless linen he wore. Here was a man who could command the good things of life, using them with a rational temperance. The room itself was in harmony with his character; it was plain but rich in its appointments, at once his library and his office, while the well-filled cases ranged about the walls showed his tastes to be in the main scholarly and intellectual.

"How long have you lived here?" asked the judge abruptly. Fentress seemed to hesitate; but the judge's glance, compelling and insistent, demanded an answer.

"Ten years."

"You have known many men of all classes as a lawyer and a planter?" said the judge. Fentress inclined his head. The judge took a step nearer him. "People have a great trick of coming and going in these western states—all sorts of damned riffraff drift in and out of these new lands." A deadly earnestness lifted the judge's words above mere rudeness. Fentress, cold and distant, made no reply. "For the past twenty years I have been looking for a man by the name of Gatewood—David Gatewood." Disciplined as he was, the colonel started violently. "Ever heard of him, Fentress?" demanded the judge with a savage scowl.

"What's all this to me?" The words came with a gasp from Fentress' twitching lips. The judge looked at him moody and frowning.

"I have reason to think this man Gatewood came to west Tennessee," he said.

"If so, I have never heard of him."

"Perhaps not under that name—at any rate, you are going to hear of him now. This man Gatewood, who between ourselves was a damned scoundrel"—the colonel winced—"this man Gatewood had a friend who threw money and business in his way—a planter he was, same as Gatewood. A sort of partnership existed between the pair. It proved an expensive enterprise for Gatewood's friend, since he came to trust the damned scoundrel more and more as time passed—even large sums of his money were in Gatewood's hands—" Fentress' countenance was like stone, as expressionless and as rigid.

By the door stood Mahaffy with Yancy and Cavendish; they understood that what was obscure and meaningless to them held a tragic significance to these two men. The judge's heavy face, ordinarily battered and debauched, but infinitely good-natured, bore how the markings of deep passion, and the voice that rumbled forth from his capacious chest came to their ears like distant thunder.

"This friend of Gatewood's had a wife—" The judge's voice broke, emotion shook him like a leaf; he was tearing open his wounds. He reached over and poured himself a drink, sucking it down with greedy lips. "There was a wife—" he whirled about on his heel and faced Fentress again. "There was a wife, Fentress—" he fixed Fentress with his blazing eyes. "A wife and child. Well, one day Gatewood and the wife were missing. Under the circumstances Gatewood's friend was well rid of the pair—he should have been grateful, but he wasn't, for his wife took his child, a daughter; and Gatewood a trifle of thirty thousand dollars his friend had intrusted to him!"

There was another silence.

"At a later day I met this man who had been betrayed by his wife and robbed by his friend. He had fallen out of the race—drink had done for him—there was just one thing he seemed to care about, and that was the fate of his child, but maybe he was only curious there. He wondered if she had lived, and married—" Once more the judge paused.

"What's all this to me?" asked Fentress.

"Are you sure it's nothing to you?" demanded the judge hoarsely. "Understand this, Fentress, Gatewood's treachery brought ruin to at least two lives. It caused the woman's father to hide his face from the world; it wasn't enough for him that his friends believed his daughter dead; he knew differently, and the shame of that knowledge ate into his soul. It cost the husband his place in the world, too—in the end it made of him a vagabond and a penniless wanderer."

"This is nothing to me," said Fentress.

"Wait!" cried the judge. "About six years ago the woman was seen at her father's home in North Carolina. I reckon Gatewood had cast her off. She didn't go back empty-handed. She had run away from her husband with a child—a girl; after a lapse of twenty years she returned to her father with a boy of two or three. There are two questions that must be answered when I find Gatewood: what became of the woman, and what became of the child; are they living or dead; did the daughter grow up and marry and have a son? When I get my answer it will be time enough to think of Gatewood's punishment!" The judge leaned forward across the table, bringing his face close to Fentress' face. "Look at me—do you know me now?"

But Fentress' expression never altered. The judge fell back a step.

"Fentress, I want the boy," he said quietly.

"What boy?"

"My grandson!"

"You are mad! What do I know of him—or you?" Fentress was gaining courage from the sound of his own voice.

"You know who he is and where he is. Your business relations with this man Ware have put you on the track of the Quintard lands in this state. You intend to use the boy to gather them in."

"You're mad!" repeated Fentress.

"Unless you bring him to me inside of twenty-four hours I'll smash you!" roared the judge. "Your name isn't Fentress, it's Gatewood; you've stolen the name of Fentress, just as you have stolen other things. What's come of Turberville's money? Damn your soul! I want my grandson! I'll pull you down and leave you stripped and bare! I'll tell the world the false friend you've been—the thief you are! I'll strip you and turn you out of these doors as naked as when you entered the world!" The judge seemed to tower above Fentress; the man had shot up out of his deep debasement. "Choose! Choose!" he thundered, his shaggy brows bent in a menacing frown.

"I know nothing about the boy," said Fentress slowly.

"By God, you lie!" stormed the judge.

"I know nothing about the boy," and Fentress took a step toward the door.

"Stay where you are!" commanded the judge. "If you attempt to leave this room to call your niggers I'll kill you on its threshold!"

But Yancy and Cavendish had that was evident, and Fentress' thin face cast itself in haggard lines. He was feeling the judge's terrible capacity, his unexpected ability to deal with a supreme situation. Even Mahaffy gazed at his friend in wonder. He had only seen him spend himself on trifles, with no further object than stepped to the door with an intention the next meal or the next drink; he had believed that as he knew him so he had always been, lax and loose of tongue and deed, a noisy tavern hero, but now he saw that he was filling what must have been the measure of his manhood.

He Tossed the Glass and Contents in Fentress' Face.

"I tell you I had no hand in carrying off the boy," said Fentress with a sardonic smile.

"I look to you to return him. Stir yourself, Gatewood, or by God, I'll hold so fierce a reckoning with you—"

The sentence remained unfinished, for Fentress felt his overwrought nerves snap, and, giving way to a sudden blind fury, struck at the judge.

"We are too old for rough and tumble," said the judge, who had displayed astonishing agility in avoiding the blow. "Furthermore we were once gentlemen. At present I am what I am, while you are a hound and a blackguard! We'll settle this as becomes our breeding." He poured himself a second glass of liquor from Fentress' decanter. "I wonder if it is possible to insult you," and he tossed glass and contents in Fentress' face. The colonel's thin features were convulsed. The judge watched him with a scornful curling of the lips. "I am treating you better than you deserve," he taunted.

"Nothing could please me half so well," he declared. He turned to the others. "Gentlemen, this is a private matter. When I have met Colonel Fentress I shall make a public announcement of why this appeared necessary to me; until then I trust this matter will not be given publicity. May I ask your silence?" He bowed again, and abruptly passed from the room.

As if the very place were evil, the judge hurried down the drive toward the road. At the gate he paused and turned on his companions, but his features wore a look of dignity that forbade comment or question. He held out his hand to Yancy.

"Sir," he said, "if I could command the riches of the Indies, it would tax my resources to meet the fractional part of my obligations to you."

"Think of that!" said Yancy, as much overwhelmed by the judge's manner as by his words.

"His Uncle Bob shall keep his place in my grandson's life! We'll watch him grow into manhood together." The judge was visibly affected. A smile of deep content parted Mr. Yancy's lips as his muscular fingers closed about the judge's hand with crushing force.

"Whoop!" cried Cavendish, delighted at this recognition of Yancy's love for the boy, and he gleefully smote the austere Mahaffy on the shoulder. But Mahaffy was dumb in the presence of the decencies; he quite lacked an interpreter. The judge looked back at the house.

"Mine!" he muttered. "The clothes he stands in—the food he eats—mine! Mine!"

CHAPTER XXV.

The Bubble Bursts.

At about the same hour that the judge was hurling threats and insults at Colonel Fentress, three men were waiting ten miles away at the head of the bayou which served to isolate Hicks' cabin. Now no one of these three had ever heard of Judge Slocum Price; the breath of his fame had never blown, however gently, in their direction, yet they were preparing to thrust opportunity upon him. To this end they were lounging about the opening in the woods where the horses belonging to Ware and Murrell were tied.

At length the dip of oars became audible in the silence and one of the trio stole down the path, a matter of fifty yards, to a point that overlooked the bayou. He was gone but a moment.

"It's Murrell all right!" he said in an eager whisper. "Him and another fellow—the Hicks girl is rowing them." He glanced from one to the other of his companions, who seemed to take firmer hold of themselves under his eye. "It'll be all right," he protested lightly. "He's as good as ours. Wait till I give you the word." And he led the way into an adjacent thicket.

Meantime Ware and Murrell had landed and were coming along the path, the outlaw a step or two in advance of his friend. They reached the horses and were untying them when the thicket suddenly disgorged the three men; each held a cocked pistol; two of these pistols covered Murrell and the third was leveled at Ware.

One of the New York representatives in congress tells of a social function in an assembly district political club on the East side, whereat the chairman of the entertainment committee acted as master of ceremonies.

The chairman was very busy introducing the newly-arrived members of the club to the guests, who included a number of municipal officers. The representative mentioned was presented in a way to halve his official honors with his wife, as "The Honorable and Mrs. Congressman Blank." Next came a couple who were not known to the master of ceremonies, but, after receiving the correct name in a whisper, he announced:

"Mr. and Mrs. Inspector of Hydrants, Faucets and Shopworks Casey."—Lippincott's.

WELL PEOPLE TOO

Wise Doctor Gives Postum to Convalescents.

A wise doctor tries to give nature its best chance by saving the little strength of the already exhausted patient, and building up wasted energy with simple but powerful nourishment.

"Five years ago," writes a doctor "I commenced to use Postum in my own family instead of coffee." (It's a well-known fact that tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) "I was so well pleased with the results that I had two grocers place it in stock, guaranteeing its sale.

"I then commenced to recommend it to my patients in place of coffee, as a nutritious beverage. The consequence is, every store in town is now selling it, as it has become a household necessity in many homes.

"I'm sure I prescribe Postum as often as any one remedy in the Materia Medica—in almost every case of indigestion and nervousness I treat, and with the best results.

"When I once introduce it into a family, it is quite sure to remain. I shall continue to use it and prescribe it in families where I practice.

"In convalescence from pneumonia, typhoid fever and other cases I give it as a liquid, easily absorbed diet. You may use my letter as a reference any way you see fit." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union of America

Matters of Especial Moment to the Progressive Agriculturist

A stitch in time is better than a disastrous rip.

The man who has nothing to do hardly ever does it right.

The pole of success is greased so that there is always room on top.

He seldom amounts to much who continually boasts of his kindness.

The thoroughly selfish person is in the same class as the self-sucking cow.

You needn't pick up worries. You can get them anywhere as you go along.

Money is the rich man's faith, the poor man's hope and the good man's charity.

Two tons of good hay saved ahead of a rain will buy a loader at last year's prices.

There is always hope for the man who is looking for a better way of doing things.

When it rains, grind up the sickle-bars and "get ready." Hay-day is bound to come.

The business morals of the community are about the same as the private morals.

In this time of strenuous work, remember overwork may be as much of a sin as laziness.

A successful farmer is known by the attention he gives to the manure produced on his place.

Watch the children's reading. Not too many stories. It destroys the tastes for the solider things.

The best use we can make of our life is to live so that we shall be a benediction to everyone we meet.

A good hay-loader with well-greased bearings will save lots of mighty hard work and maybe a sprained back.

It is strange that so many men make fools of themselves when there are so many others who desire to do the job for them.

The man who makes his living from the soil and grows a surplus for others, is the nearest to independence of any man on earth.

SECURING MOST FROM FARMS

Diversification Extends Operations and Materially Reduces Many Dangers of Failure.

One of the benefits of diversified agriculture is that it extends farm operations to include several crops so that the danger of failure may be reduced. This benefit alone is sufficient to commend diversified farming, although it is by no means the only benefit. There are others that are worthy of consideration.

No manager is justified in diversifying crops for the sake of a variety. His reason for diversification must have a broader view and a more substantial foundation than that there be variety of products for the sake of variety. There must be utility for every crop grown. The crops should be profitable. No crop should be selected to occupy a place in the rotation unless it is profitable, either for soil improvement, feed for stock, for home consumption or as a money crop.

Before any crop is decided upon in the rotation scheme, the manager should have sufficient evidence that it can be successfully grown on his farm. This is no time for experiment. Your experience and practical observations should guide you in selecting crops for various purposes in the rotation. You cannot afford to have the scheme fail because the crops you selected are not adapted to your environments.

Markets must be carefully considered when you are planning and carrying out your rotation plan. Every crop should have a demand on your farm or as a commercial product in the open market. It is highly desirable that you decide what disposition will be made of the products before they are planted.

For instance, corn planted for the silo may be planted late, but if planted for grain for the animals it should be planted early. Sorghum planted for roughage is managed different from that planted for sirup. Cowpeas planted for hay are not managed in the same manner as when planted exclusively for soil improvement.

It is nearly always desirable to extend the rotation plan to include the necessary products that can be grown for the family table and to maintain the live stock on the farm. There are crops that make heavy demand upon the soil, and while not ordinarily profitable when sold on the market, are profitable when used at home or fed to animals. These are some of the problems that must be solved by the manager who has entered upon a progressive system of rotation.

Cleanliness Counts.

No need to wear white pants in the dairy—blue ones can be washed just as often. It's the cleanliness, not the color that counts.

FEW FACTS ON CO-OPERATION

Ontario Department of Agriculture Issues Bulletin Giving Information of Much Value.

"Agricultural Co-operation" is the title of a bulletin recently issued by the Ontario department of agriculture. Although this bulletin specially deals with the application of the principle of co-operation to the province of Ontario, it also contains a great deal of information that is of much interest to us all. In it the progress of the movement in Europe is briefly outlined. A description is given of the methods of agricultural co-operation in Canada and the United States. It is stated that the movement originated about the year 1849, by the establishment of co-operative credit banks in Germany. Out of these credit societies there grew up supply and marketing associations, and the success of agriculture today is largely due to co-operative organization. In Denmark the highest degree of attainment has been reached in agricultural co-operation. The movement began by the establishment of the first co-operative store in 1866. In 1882 the first co-operative dairy was established, and in 1887 the first bacon factory was established. The first egg-export society was formed in 1895, and in 1906 the first shipping association. At the present time, it is estimated that 80 per cent. of the dairy products and 60 per cent. of the bacon are handled co-operatively. Under co-operation, the butter trade of Denmark has increased from seventeen million dollars in 1882 to fifty-five million dollars in 1908. In the dairy societies of Denmark the principle of unlimited liability is followed, each member assuming full responsibility for all the liabilities of the association. Thero are produce societies which manage and protect the members and they are united under the marketing associations. A butter quotation committee watches the markets and furnishes quotations to the societies. The bacon and similar societies are modeled after the dairy associations, but egg export societies are somewhat different. The form adopted with regard to the latter is to have small associations which employ men to gather the eggs of the members, and deliver them to the railway stations, for shipment, consigned to stores and packing houses, which now take the responsibility of marketing. Before the eggs leave an individual member of the society he marks them with a number given to him by the society, so that if the eggs are found to be bad they can be traced to place of production.

With regard to co-operation in Canada it is stated that the lack of understanding on the part of those attempting organization has been prevalent, and only lately has the true co-operative idea begun to make way. The chief fields of organization among Ontario farmers have been wholesale and retail supplies, dairying, bacon-curing, and fruit marketing. There are at present thirty-six so-called co-operative fruit associations in Ontario, but some of these are organized in the form of joint-stock companies. In investigating the failures of several fruit associations, the following causes were stated to be the principal ones: 1. Lack of knowledge of the co-operative idea. 2. The society was a joint-stock company. 3. The acreage of fruit was so small that successful business could not be built up. 4. Bad management.

An account is given of the proper method of organization, and the form of a constitution and by-laws which is suited to any co-operative association where capital is needed to carry on business.

STUDYING PROFIT AND LOSS

Too Little Attention Is Given to Keeping Accounts of Little Details of the Farm.

The young farmer or the old one as well should look for the roads that lead to profit or loss on the farm and see to it that he gets started on the right road. Too little attention is given to the computing of profits and also studying losses. It is not easy to figure out the profits on the farm for a single year, provided the farm is improved with better fences, tile drains, systematic rotation of crops and improvement of stock. Where personal labor is exchanged by the owner for the improvement of his farm he is quite apt to neglect to figure in this amount on the profit side of the ledger.

The farmer can, however, keep accounts of the general details of his work and by so doing know just about where he is coming out at the end of the year. One of the helps in looking ahead is by the putting of his eggs in more than one basket. We would not, however, have too many baskets. Getting at the profits means looking ahead, better farm management, more business methods and an ability to be resourceful.

Finding Contentment.

From the soil spring the necessities of physical life and the farmer finds contentment in the daily contemplation of the harvest prospects and enjoys the fruits of his own toil.

To Enjoy Life.

The farm is the best place to enjoy life, where artificial conditions are eliminated and man comes into direct contact with nature.

REPORTED BY THE GROUCH

"Having nothing else to do," remarked the old codger, "I attended a function while I was over at Torpidville the other day. The affair was held in a dispirited grove at the end of a road in which every time a horse popped down his foot the dust shot up in the air like a skyrocket. A band was playing without the slightest remorse. A statesman, with a neck as wrinkled as a pickle, droned forth redundant nonentities without end. A sad and rickety merry-go-wabble wound 'round and 'round to the sound of its own plaintive peedle-deedle. In tipsy pavilion a hoarse person was endeavoring to sell, in brazen defiance to the pure food and drug act, what looked alarmingly like horned toads fried in axle-grease. A gentleman in a striped tent nearby hoarsely stated that he preferred to eat snakes at ten cents per serpent. There was the usual balloon which seemed perfectly willing to do anything but get up. Scattered around through the festal scene were a few old soldiers, grumbling; a smattering of farmers, also grumbling; sundry honest voters, likewise grumbling; and various other folks, nothing about whom is worth mentioning except that they, too, were grumbling. It may have been a reunion, a fair, a rally, a picnic, or what-not; but whatever they chanced to call it, 'twas an excellent example of one of our most cherished institutions."—Kansas City Star.

ONE EXPLANATION.

The Serious Man—He has six daughters, but he won't let any of them get married.

The Joker—Maybe he doesn't want to break the set.

The Other Way 'Round.

A good little story, long current in England, is now just gaining American circulation. It has for leading characters Rudyard Kipling and Dorothy Drew, Mr. Gladstone's little grandchild. Kipling was visiting Hawarden and, being fond of children, devoted himself to little Miss Dorothy until her anxious mother expressed the hope that the child had not been wearying the great author.

"Oh, no, mamma," spoke up Dorothy, before any one else had a chance to say anything, "but you have no idea how Mr. Kipling has been wearying me!"

Instinctive.

"So you took your wife to the baseball game?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Meekton.

"Did she enjoy it?"

"Only part of it. She thought they wasted a great deal of time running around the lot, but she thought the arguments with the umpire were quite interesting."—Washington Star.

Kind Man.

A local philanthropist ordered a fan for himself, a nice electric buzzer. He also took the key out of the door so that some of the air could go through the keyhole into the adjoining room, where there are eight perspiring clerks.

A great majority of summer ills are due to Malaria in suppressed form. Lassitude and headaches are but two symptoms. OXIDINE eradicates the Malaria germ and tones up the entire system.

Got His Answer.

When Oscar Wilde came to the United States to lecture on aesthetics in his highly aesthetic velvet costumes—and incidentally to prepare the public mind for the proper appreciation of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience," in which the aesthetic movement was held up to ridicule—he used to complain that America was very uninteresting since it had "no antiquities and no curiosities." But he ventured on this disparagement once too often, for in the course of his travels he uttered it to the American Girl, and she replied with the demure depravity of candid innocence that this was not quite a fair reproach, since "we shall have the antiquities in time, and we are already importing the curiosities."

Child's Fear of the Dark.

If mothers notice that the brains of their little ones conjure up uncanny sights and thoughts from the shadows of a room more or less dark, let the light burn brightly. To force a child to become accustomed to the darkness is a grave error, if its nervous system is so organized that this forcing is productive of a fright.

The nervous system of a child is a very susceptible organization and the deleterious impressions made upon it will often make their influence felt throughout its whole after life. If the child asks for a light under such circumstances do not refuse it.

AFTER THE DOCTOR FAILED. Even the most stubborn cases of malaria yield to Elixir Babek. "In the summer of 1896, I contracted the disease known as Malaria. After a year's fruitless treatment by a prominent Washington physician, I was entirely cured by your Elixir Babek."—Brasie O'Hagan, Troop E, 6th U. S. Cav. It is equally good for bilious disorders. Autocratic Assertions.

"Are you a servant of the people?" asked the constituent.

"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum. "Only it should be observed that a really first-class servant may come pretty nearly being a boss."

Ideals.

"What is your idea of a perfect husband?"

"One with about a million, who would lose no time in making me a merry widow."

As a summer tonic there is no medicine that quite compares with OXIDINE. It not only builds up the system, but taken regularly, prevents Malaria. Regular or Tasteless formula at Druggists.

ALMOST INCREDIBLE.

Wakely—Whirly must be making an awful lot of money.

Wisely—I should say he is. I actually believe he is making more than his wife can spend.

Mother's Lingual Attainment.

The mother of a little boy in Kansas City, Kan., recites negro dialect stories charmingly. Her small son is quite proud of her accomplishment and frequently boasts of it. One day recently, when some of his playmates were vaunting the achievements of their several mothers, the little boy braggingly remarked:

"My mother is smarter than any of yours; she can talk two languages."

"What are they?" demanded his companions.

"White and colored."

Moving Pictures Popular.

In a recent number of the Daily Consular Reports are collected memoranda from cities and towns in various distant parts of the world showing the universal quality of the popular interest which the moving pictures excite. England, Japan, Turkey, Mexico, India, Australia and the islands of the sea all have the same story to tell; wherever the cinematograph goes it finds an instant and sustained welcome.

With a great deal of satisfaction The Union and Banner has watched the several movements leading to the formation of a new political party, realizing the importance to the people that any opposition to the existing parties must necessarily be of such strength and virility, must present the issues that confront us, must offer a solution of the proisting evils.

We are living today, have to meet the conditions of today, have to pay the expenses of today, and while it is only right and proper for us to leave a fair heritage to those who come after us our first duty is to ourselves and to demand our full rights and privileges.

Time and again appeals have been made to the two old parties —Republican and Democratic— for relief, and the only answer received has been a continuation of the old conditions, and what is worse, an augmentation in the costs of the necessaries of life, largely brought about by political conditions. There should be, and must be, a remedy for this, and in our opinion the remedy is offered by the Progressive Party organized at Chicago, August 5, 1912.

The platform of the Progressive Party is complete and comprehensive and we regret our inability at this moment to give it in full. Beginning with an arraignment of the old parties it pledges itself to secure such alterations in the law as shall insure the representativecharacter of the government. A more easy and expeditious method of amending the federal constitution is provided for. Equal suffrage to men and women alike is one of the planks in the platform. The Progressive Party demands such restrictions of the power of courts as shall leave to the people the ultimate authority to determine fundamental questions of social welfare and public policy. A reform of legal proceedure; social and industrial justice; the establishment of a Department of Labor, which includes a plank to foster the development of agricultural credit and cooperation, and bringing the benefits of better farming, better business and better living within the reach of the farming class. The high cost of living will be looked into, public health, business methods, interstate commerce commission will be regulated. The natural resources of the nation must be promptly developed and generously used to supply the peoples needs. The rivers and waterways shall be opened to traffic and in connection with the Panama Canal shall be utilized in co-operation with the various States at the lowest cost to the people. A protective tariff which shall equalize conditions of competition between the United States and foreign governments, both for the farmer and the manufacturer, and which shall maintain for labor an adequate standard of living. A graduated inheritance and income tax is provided for.

Briefly, the above is an epitome of the platform of the Progressive Party, and is offered for your consideration.

To use the word of Governor Johnson of California: "This is a new era, a new fight, a new political creed of equal opportunity, of a fair deal for all human kind, a creed of humanity that is now the creed of one of the great political parties of the United States."

What will the free and independent voters of Chilton County do with it? The past history of the county, which has been one of independent thought and action, forces us to believe the Progressive Party will be hailed with acclamation, and the public meeting to be held at Clanton on Friday, August 30, we hope will bring together the largest and most enthusiastic body of Chilton voters, ready and anxious to take their place in the Progressive Party of the nation.

The Convention will be addressed by some well known speakers, and a thorough explanation of the platform and purposes of the Progressive Party will be made by Judge A. P. Longshore, the popular official of Shelby County, and Hon. R. A. Perryman, of Heflin, chairman of the Progressive Party of Cleburn County, and others are expected.

We have heard and read so many denunciations of the Republican party by the Democrats as being the sole hope of the negroes that it is somewhat surprising to see in a Birmingham morning paper of August 14 that a "Colored Wilson and Marshall Club" has been formed in that city, apparently with the approval of the Democrats of that section. From a Democratic point of view it depends upon whose ox is being gored.

In the last issue of the Union-Banner, in the editorial referring to the new Progressive Party, the following appeared at the end of the second paragraph:

"The platforms of the Republican and Democratic parties of the present day, both of which have adopted several of the planks in the Peoples Party platform which twenty years ago they decided."

Printers are fallible mortals, liable to make blunders occasionally, and the intelligent compositor decided to make it "decided" when it was written "derided," putting an entirely different construction on the paragraph. Decision is a favorite method of both of the old parties, but decision in the interest of the people is something they have seldom attempted.

The Danish Plan.

In Denmark, as in other countries, they are troubled with men born tired, men who are "snow-shovelers in summer and haymakers in winter." Denmark takes them firmly but kindly and puts them to bed. In bed it keeps them as long as may be necessary. Four days are, as a rule, sufficient for the most obdurate cases. At the end of that time the idler is found to be feverish for work.

Why He Sighed.

"There will be no marriage nor giving in marriage in heaven," said Mrs. Henpeck. Mr. Henpeck drew a long, deep, sad sigh. "Why do you look so sad about it, Henry?" she asked. "We haven't any such assurance about conditions in the other place."

EAST JONES.

The farmers are enjoying a few days rest now but will soon be very busy saving fodder.

Protracted meetings seem to be very stylish; if they continue much longer I will be sorry for the poor old mules that have to pull the hay wagons the young people seem to enjoy so much.

Preaching services held at Bethel school house last Saturday and Sunday night were attended by a large crowd. Our Sunday School is progressing nicely and we want to thank Miss Celestia Hunter for her delightful service rendered us during her vacation; we will regret very much to see her leave us again so soon.

Hurry up, Mr Hunter, and give us another old time cream supper.

Prof. T. P. Stephens, wife and little daughter, Daisy Berniee, who have been visiting their parents Mr and Mrs Jno. P. Hunter have returned to Troy, Ala. where Prof. Stephens is in business with his brother.

School in this community is progressing nicely with Prof. J. A. Hunter as teacher.

Quite a large crowd attended the barbecue near Pletcher last Saturday; all report a nice time.

We are all looking forward to the barbecue at Hester School House the 17th. If this escapes the waste basket will write again.

The State Fair at Birmingham has come to be, in reality, the reflection of the physical and financial conditionof our state. The coming exhibition of Alabama products at the Fair, October 3d to 12th, will eclipse in every way, the fine record of last year

The management of the AlabamaFair at Birmingham, assured of the encouragement and patronage of the people in building there a State Fair that shall stand among the greatest in the union, will not disappoint a single visitor during the ten days of October 3rd to 12th. The racing and exhibits in all departments will be greater than ever witnessed at any State Fair in the south. They should be enjoyed by every Alabamian.

The State Fair at Birmingham is in a class with the principal fairs of other states of the south and far ahead of the majority of them. All of these have been financed by many thousands of dollars of the money of the citizens of the state and appropriation has been made by the State of Alabama itself for the production of agriculture exhibits.

A. S. Jones, of the Lee Pharmacy, Chico, Cal., who has handled Foley & Co.'s medicines for many years, says: "I consider that Foley's Honey and Tar Compound has no equal, and is the one cough medicine I can recommend as containing no narcotics or other harmful properties." REMINDED HER OF OLD DAY

Real Old-Fashioned House Cleaning in the City Interesting Because of Its Novelty.

"There's a real old-fashioned housecleaning going on next door," said the girl who lives on the top floor, "and it's so long since I saw anything approaching it that it seems mighty interesting. People move so much in New York that there doesn't appear to be any more reason for housecleaning. They have rugs instead of carpets and they hang pictures on tacks and leave their curtains up all summer, which no self-respecting woman would do in the old days.

"But next door they are beating carpets and painting shutters and they've hung all the winter clothes out on the lines and washed the blankets and whitewashed the cellar and put the window screens out, and played the hose on them, and you can just imagine how clean and cool and shining the house will be when it's all over with. Of course it is not so easy as the new way of hiring housecleaning companies that bring their air brooms and other apparatus that do the job up in twenty-four hours or so, but you cannot convince an old housekeeper that the machine way of cleaning house is better than the old way any more than you could make her believe pure food pickles are equal to the homemade kind."—Press York Press.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

IN MEMORIAM OF PHYLIA HAND.

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. Phylia, was the wife of E. D. Hand and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Stonecypher. She was born February 17, 1880. She joined the Missionary Baptist Church at the age of 15, and has ever been a bright light in the church, in the community and everywhere that her presence was.

She was sick for a number of years before she was called to the great beyond, but never a murmur did you hear, always cheerful, speaking words of contentment to those around her, telling them of her faith in the great beyond.

Yes, the writer of this article was present on numerous occasions in the last few months of her sickness, and oh, how good it made me feel to hear her speak words of consolation to her relatives and friends and caution them to be ready when the great summons comes. Let me say to husband, father, mother and sisters, weep not, Phylia is gone, she will not be seen any more in life but if we live right we will meet her in the great beyond where there will be no more good byes. Yes, all was done for her that loving hands could do, and before I close this short sketch will say that her husband, father and mother want to thank their neighbors, and especially Dr. Hayes for their many kindnesses during their loved one's sickness and death.

GOVERNOR WANTS DETECTIVE FUND

CHIEF EXECUTIVE SAYS MONEY IS NEEDED TO TRACE MANY LAW VIOLATORS.

INSTITUTES IN 5 COUNTIES

Franklin, Winston, Walker, Fayette and Lamar Counties Teachers Meet.

Montgomery.—Governor O'Neal believes the state should provide a special fund to be used by the chief executive in the employment of detectives. The governor declared that he has had in recent months frequent occasions to employ special officers to assist local authorities in apprehending criminals and other violators of the law, but that he has been hadicapped owing to the fact that there is no fund allowed him for the employment of such detectives.

The governor is of the opinion that the legislature should make a special appropriation for this purpose and he stated that should the state lawmakers assemble in special session he will use his influence to get a measure of this nature passed.

Teachers Institutes.

Montgomery.—Teachers' institutes began in five counties of the state, in Franklin, at Russellville; Winston, at Double Springs; Walker, at Jasper; Fayette, at Fayette, and in Lamar county, at Vernon.

Superintendent of Education Willingham is much pleased with the work that is being done at the various county institutes, and he thinks the good results that have been accomplished will show in the public schools throughout the state during the coming session.

Superintendent Willingham is visiting several of the institutes this week.

MUST NOT BE INTERRUPTED.

Willingham Suggests All Special Lecturers Use Evening Hours.

Montgomery. — Superintendent of Education Henry J. Willingham has expressed the wish that all special lecturers and representatives of publishing houses who visit the county teachers' institute use the evening hours for the purpose of speaking on the subjects assigned to them. Superintendent Willingham says that he thinks this is wise inasmuch as the institutes only hold for five days, which hardly allows sufficient time for the regular work to be done.

During the summer various special lecturers and representatives of publishing houses have visited the institutes, some of whom have used the regular school hours for the purpose of speaking on their particular subjects. Mr. Willingham thinks these lecturers should deliver their addresses in the evning, which does not then interefere with the regular institute work.

"Trusty" Makes Good His Escape.

Montgomery.—Ill at ease over the prospects of serving a penitentiary sentence for alleged embezzlement of $11,000 from the state, J. M. Lamons, former superintendent of education of Geneva county, made good a dash for liberty. He was a "trusty" at the county prison and was considered a model prisoner. The embezzlement of which Lamons is charged was made known about four years ago when he secured funds from the state to pay teachers of Geneva county. Instead of paying the factulty he fled and was not captured until three months ago in Galveston, Texas. Rewards have been posted for the capture of the man and bloodhounds are on the scent.

Kolb Worked For Bill.

Montgomery. — Reuben F. Kolb, state commissioner of agriculture, has returned from Washington, where he worked in the interest of the bill authorizing the Alabama Interstate Water Power company to construct a dam on the Coosa river above Wetumpka. Commissioner Kolb reports the bill passed the senate and should encounter but little opposition in the house.

Wright Resigns From Legislature.

Montgomery.—San T. Wright, internal revenue collector, tendered his resignation as a member of the legislature to Governor O'Neal. He represented Fayette county, and was one of the three republican members in the lower house. There are now nine vacancies in the legislature.

Gadsden.—Gadsden people are much interested in the development of a vein of black marble which has been discovered recently in Calhoun county. So far as known there has been no black marble mined in the south. The only quarries of any importance are at Shoreham, Vermont, and Glen Falls, N. Y. The market for black marble is said to be practically unlimited, and it is said that it commands a good price. Options have been secured on the property near here, and the prospect probably will be developed.

ROAD MONEY FOR COUNTIES.

Thirty counties Receive Appropriation for 1911—Fifteen Counties Have Not Applied.

Montgomery.—Fifteen counties of the state have until January 1 in which to make application for their share of the state aid appropriation for the construction of public highways. This announcement was made by State Highway Engineer W. S. Keller, who has been traveling from one end of the state to the other during the past year in the interest of state aid work.

Thirty counties of the state have received their appropriation for the year 1911, while nearly 25 counties have received both the 1911 appropriation and their pro rata for the present year, leaving in the neighborhood of 15 counties that have made no effort to benefit by the legislature's generosity in the establishment of state aid highways.

Under the law, all counties that do not claim their share of the state appropriation for two successive years lose the money to which they were entitled.

If the 15 counties that have not yet applied for their appropriation for the year 1911 and 1912 fail to do so by January 1, the $4,000 to which these counties were entitled will revert back to the general fund, though they can then claim their share for the year 1913, together with their pro rata of whatever other money that may have reverted back to the general fund from failure of counties to claim their appropriation.

Road construction work is now in progress in a majority of the counties of the state, and the highway department is kept busy visiting the various sections of Alabama for the purpose of inspecting these roads.

BIG MEETING IN PELHAM.

Eighth Annual Alabama State Baptist Encampment Convenes—Large Number Present.

Pelham.—The eighth annual Alabama State Baptist encampment convened here August 20.

Pelham is on the main line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, twenty-two miles south of Birmingham. The Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic main line also enters Pelham.

The encampment grounds are on a mountain ridge, the fifty acres recently purchased by the Baptists exclusively for their regular encampment site.

Following is the gist of the program as previously announced:

August 21 was observed as "Pastors' Day," Dr. A. J. Dickinson, pastor of the First Baptist church of Birmingham, made the feature address, his subject being: "An Organized Baptist Ministry."

August 22 was oberved as "Woman's Missionary Union Day." Dr. J. C. Massee, of Chattanooga making the feature address.

August 23 will be known as "Laymen's Day." The special speaker will be the secretary of the Laymen's Movement of South Carolina, W. E. Wilkins.

The Baptist Young People's Union will have charge of the entire Saturday's program, the Rev. Dr. W. M. Anderson, of Birmingham, being the chief speaker.

On Sunday the day will be known as "Evangel Day," the program including two sermons from Mobile and Montgomery pastors. A Sunday school will be conducted in the morning by L. P. Leavell.

August 26 will be given over to the Sunday schools, the chief speaker being Prof. J. V. Brown, of Dothan.

O'NEAL MUST WAIT ACTION.

Annexation of Birmingham Mediacl College is Delayed.

Montgomery.—Governor O'Neal has found that he cannot call together the board of trustees of the University of Alabama to consider the proposed annexation of the Birmingham Medical College, unless at least four members of the board petition him for an extra session. The Governor believes however, that there are as many as four board members who want to settle the question.

Following a conference wtih a Birmingham delegation about a month ago, the Governor announced that he would call the board together at Tuscaloosa, September 16. Since he has found that he was without authority at the time to call the meeting, he will wait for expressions from members of the board.

TEACHERS FOR FOUR COUNTIES.

DeKalb Leads With Forty-Seven Successful Applicants.

Montgomery.—Names of successful applicants for teachers' certificates were announced for several counties by P. W. Hodges, of the State Department of Education, DeKalb County lead with forty-seven, all being whites, with Pike second with thirty-eight, with only five negroes. The other counties are Blount and Talladega.

Will Review Its Work.

Montgomery.—Review of the first half year's work and the laying of plans for the remaining month of the year will be the results of a conference between Dr. W. W. Dingmore, director of the Hookworm Commission and his four field workers. The field workers are Doctors C. A. Grote, E. V. Caldwell, J. Frazier Orr and W. W. Perdue. The commission has directed work in twenty-one Alabama counties since the inauguration of the move to eradicate hookworm in the State.

SPECIAL MESSAGE ON CANAL BILL

WOULD ALLOW FOREIGN NATIONS TO TEST LEGALITY OF PROVISION.

PRESIDENT'S SUGGESTIONS

Taft Anxious to Sign Bill, But Wants to Assure Other Nations of American Fairness.

Washington.—President Taft closed a day of conferences on the Panama canal bill with a special message to Congress, suggesting the passage of legislation which would permit American ships to travel the canal toll free and which also would allow foreign nations to test the legality of this provision by suits in the United States courts.

The President discussed the message with senators and members of the House and its wording finally was decided upon at a meeting of the cabinet.

It was the belief that a determined effort will be made to meet the President's wishes, although some leaders, particularly those in the House, were inclined to believe the message meant no further action in regard to the canal at this session.

The President explained he was anxious to sign the bill but wished to assure other governments of the spirit of fairness on the part of the United States.

The President was told that an act of Congress would have the effect of abrogating any treaty previously agreed to and the decision of the supreme court over the Chinese exclusion act was given as authority for the statement. His suggestion to Congress for additional legislation is designed to prevent any such construction as that of the supreme court in the Chinese case. It reads as follows:

"That nothing contained in the act entitled, 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection and operation of the Panama canal, and the sanitation and government of the canal zone,' shall be deemed to repeal any provision of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, or to affect the judicial construction thereon, or in any wise to impair any rights or provisions which have been or may be acquired by any foreign nation under the treaties of the United States relative to tolls or other charges for the passage of vessels through the Panama canal and that when any alien whether natural person, partnership, company or corporation, considers that the charging of tolls or the enforcement of any other regulation under and pursuant to the provisions of this act violates in any way any such treaty rights or provisions, such alien shall have the right to bring action against the United States for a redress of the injury which he considers himself to have suffered and the district courts of the United States are hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine such cases and to decree the appropriate relief, and from the decision of such district courts there shall be an appeal by either party to the action to the supreme court of the United States."

"This language," continued the message, "negatives absolutely any desire on the part of Congress to repeal the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, or to violate its provisions by this legislation, and leaves open to any person who deems himself aggrieved by the provisions of the act, an opportunity to appeal to our courts."

SUN YAT SEN ASSASSINATED.

Rumors Say First Provisional President of China Has Met With Foul Play.

San Francisco.—Rumors that Dr. Sun Yat Sen, first provisional president of China, has been assassinated in Peking by the soldiers of President Yuan Shi Kai, caused great excitement in Chinatown. The rumors could be traced to no authentic source, but varying reports of alleged assassination were posted on bulletin boards throughout the Chinese quarters.

At the offices of the Chinese consul general and the two Chinese daily newspapers no news of an attack upon Dr. Sun had been received and the report of his death was given little credence.

According to the rumors placarded in Chinatown, Dr. Sun had left Shanghai for Peking to undertake to save the republic from a threatened renewal of hostilities, as the result of the execution of Generals Ching Chen Wu and Aeng Wei.

Holdup Men Obtain $1,100.

Lexington, Ky.—Joseph Candioto, agent for a cash register and a typewriter company here, was assaulted and robbed of $1,100 in diamonds and cash by two men, as he was preparing to leave his office. He was found several hours later by a newspaper reporter who was attracted by groans coming from the office. Candioto said the men had concealed themselves behind furniture in the office, and when he turned out the light, they set upon him and beat him into insensibility.

STATE BRIEFS.

Montgomery.—Agricultural fairs in this State have come to be little more than commercial enterprises, promoted for financial gain to those in immediate charge and to increase the trade of merchants who back them with subscriptions.

Governor O'Neal made this charge in discussing criticisms heaped upon him by some for not releasing the $20,000 appropriation, made to go for premiums at county fairs. He made it clear that, in his opinion, the real purpose of agricultural fairs has been blotted out by those who are seeking commercial and financial advantage.

The Governor's refusal to approve applications seeking portions of the fund for use in fall fairs is not all, for he declares he will make efforts to have the next Legislature withdraw the appropriation in toto. He will recede from this position, he says, only after there is a similar fund made up from an outside source to cover the appropriation.

Montgomery.—Albert Milan, a Tallapoosa county boy, has been sentenced to serve one year in the United States prison for forgery. He was arrested some time ago in his home county. Judge Thomas G. Jones, of the United States court, sentenced him.

Selma.—Quite a party of Selma business men and well known farmers of Dallas county will leave Selma on August 26 for a trip through the boll weevil section of the cotton belt in Mississippi and Louisiana. The business men and farmers will make the trip for the purpose of studying conditions in the section which they will visit.

Montgomery.—W. H. Taylor, Jr., son of Chief of Police Taylor, and W. C. Stephens are locked in the Montgomery county jail charged with murder in the first degree as the result of a shooting scrape which occurred at Washington park, a negro pleasure resort of this city, in which Arthur Turner, a negro, received wounds from which he died and William Holland, another negro, was seriously injured. The two white men are held in jail without bond.

Montgomery.—Dr. William H. Oates, state prison inspector, is in south Alabama on an inspection tour of the jails in that section of the state. Dr. Oates went from Montgomery to Clark county, where he will first inspect the prison in that county, after which he will visit other county bastiles in that part of the state.

Geiger.—Russell county criminal court has been in session at Seale the past week, Judge H. T. Benton presiding. About 18 cases were heard, mostly for minor offenses, and a number of these demanded jury trial and were bound over. The charge of murder against Bat and Burrell Smith was nol prossed on account of lack of direct evidence.

Meridian.—Thomas Simon, alias Henry Smith, was arrested in Meridian on a charge of having murdered his wife in Prairieville, Ala., last June. Simon does not deny the shooting, but claims that it was purely accidental. He will make no fight against being taken back to Alabama for trial, and the Alabama authorities have been advised of his apprehension.

Mobile.—While turning out the lights in his father's store at Crichton, J. T. Stallworth, son of J. P. Stallworth, postmaster at Critchton, was shot by an unidentified man who escaped. Arrival of neighbors prevented, it is believed, the robbery of the postoffice. The postoffice is in the store. Stallworth received a 38-calibre bullet through his shoulder, but will recover.

Carrollton.—The physicians have inaugurated a warm fight against the hookworm disease in the county and will have free dispensaries throughout the county for examination and treatment of this widespread disease. Dr. Carl A. Grote, representing the State Board of Health, will conduct the dispensaries, assisted by the physicians of the different localities where they will be held.

Gadsden.—The rod mill of the Southern Iron and Steel Company after being closed since July 15, went into operation, furnishing employment to a large force of workmen. Agents have been sent North for more men. The plant will be in full operation, employing 2,000 men by September 1. The demand for iron and steel is stronger than it has been for several years.

Gadsden.—Socialists of Etowah county are organizing. State Organizer W. M. Doyle went to Collinsville where a club was organized.

Selma.—The school census of Dallas County which has just been completed and compiled show a decided increase in the population of the county as well as it did in the city. There are 19,276 school children in Dallas. Of this number 2,746 are white and 16,430 negroes.

Mobile.—The Merchants Company, of Citronelle, was made defendant in an involuntary bankruptcy proceedings filed by creditors in the United States district court. The corporation made admission of insolvency.

WILLING HE SHOULD GO

One Man to Have Kid Transferred He May Have Had a Grouch.

"What do you think of this scheme of having the countries exchange children?" asked the Sewickley man.

"I don't think anything about it," said the Wilkinsburg man. "What's the idea?"

"An English family, for instance, exchanges children for a couple of years with a German family. Reference is first exchanged, and all sorts of things."

"I see."

"Thus both sets of children have a chance to learn another language and get acquainted with another country. It's quite a scheme."

"It's an elegant scheme," declared the Wilkinsburg man. "My neighbor have a kid that I would like to see exchanged with some family in Siberia."

BAD CASE OF HEMORRHOIDS

Okalona, Ark.—"I had a bad case of itching and burning piles, and tried many remedies without relief. I could not sleep nor rest at night. The affected parts were irritated, also inflamed, and my family physician said I would have to undergo an operation.

"I bathed good with Cuticura Soap in pure water about fifteen minutes, then I applied the Cuticura Ointment. I did this four times a day for three weeks, then three times a day for one other week, and in the space of six weeks I was cured sound and well. One box of Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap cured my case of piles of six years' standing. When I commenced to use the Cuticura Soap and the Cuticura Ointment, I only weighed one hundred and twenty-eight pounds. Now I weigh one hundred and eight pounds." (Signed) Floyd Wood, Dec. 11, 1911.

Tock Slot Machine at Its Work.

A Kansas City woman recently took her two small daughters to make their first visit to her husband's people living in a small Kansas town. Naturally she was anxious to make as favorable an impression as possible. So the two little people, on going on an errand to the depot, were cautioned to be on their very best behavior. To their mother's surprise, they returned vigorously chewing gum. As they had no money, she asked them where they got it.

"Oh," exclaimed the older one, "we said on the slot machine, 'Ask your agent for pennies,' so we did.

Case of Mistaken Identity.

President Taft was out for his afternoon walk in Washington one day when a flaxen-haired little girl ran in front of him, held up her face and exclaimed, in a shrill voice:

"I know who you are!"

The president, thinking it not at all unusual that she should possess such information, but willing to gratify her, asked:

"Well, who am I?"

"Aw," she said teasingly, "you're Humpty Dumpty."—Popular Magazine.

TO DRIVE OUT MALARIA AND BUILD UP THE SYSTEM

Take the Old Standard GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC. You know what you are taking. The formula is plainly printed on every bottle, showing it is simply Quinine and Iron in a tasteless form, and the most effectual form. For grown people and children, 50 cents.

When a couple is engaged they look at each other's virtue's with magnifying glasses, which are thrown away on their wedding day.

Regular practicing physicians recommend and prescribe OXIDINE for Malaria, because it is a proven remedy by years of experience. Keep a bottle in the medicine chest and administer at first sign of Chills and Fever.

If it were not for the trusts what would a man who fails in business blame for it?

HARD FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

It's hard enough to keep house if in perfect health, but a woman who is weak, tired and suffering all of the time with an aching back has a heavy burden to carry. Any woman in this condition has good cause to suspect kidney trouble, especially if the kidney action seems disordered or at all. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women suffering in this way. It is the best-recommended special kidney remedy.

A South Carolina Case

Mrs. Mary West, Spartanburg, S.C. says: "I was down so bad with my back I could not get about. My appetite became poor and I felt all worn out and discouraged. Doan's Kidney Pills put me in good shape and I now feel better than before in years."

REBELS FAIL TO CAPTURE MANAGUA

GOVERNMENT FORCES ARE STILL IN POSSESSION OF MANAGUA.

MANY KILLED AND WOUNDED

The Arrival of the United States Marines Caused Great Relief to All.

Managua.—In the four days' battle between insurgents under Generals Mena and Zelidon and government troops commanded by Gen. Emilio Chamorro for the possession of Managua, ended in a victory for the defenders, the Federals losing 14 men killed and 125 wounded; rebel casualties are estimated at between 400 and 500 men, killed or wounded.

In addition, a number of non-combatants, including several women and children, lost their lives. The hospitals are filled with the wounded. Many citizens who were injured by the bursting missiles have died in the improvised infirmaries.

The battle ended when, after final repulse, the rebels retired in some disorder to Masaya, capital of a department of the same name south of Managua. The government has made no effort to pursue the insurgents.

The battalion composed of three companies of American marines, under command of Major Smedley D. Butler, which arrived here from Panama to reinforce the smaller detachment of American bluejackets, landed previously, was the cause of great relief to all. The situation at the capital was horrible, and the arrival of the American reinforcements has restored confidence and turned the despondency of the populace into rejoicing.

Inhabitants here were in a nervous panic after the desperate rebel attacks, when they nearly broke through the line of government troops.

Two thousand or more of the population fled, as many as possible leaving on the trains and the poor classes taking to the fields out of range of the bursting missiles. The natives feared another assault would be successful, and the city would be captured, leaving it open to subsequent sacking, which rebel prisoners say insurgent general promised.

CLARENCE DARROW FREED

Verdict in Sequel to Famous McNamara Case Returned in 31 Minutes.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Clarence S. Darrow, the noted Chicago lawyer, was found not guilty of the charge of bribing a juror in the McNamara case. The jury was out just 31 minutes.

Judge Hutton, in his charge, eliminated the first count in the indictment, that Darrow had bribed George N. Lockwood, a regularly drawn jjuror in the case of J. B. McNamara. The evidence, Judge Hutton instructed, did not justify a verdict of guilty on the first count.

The second count charged Darrow with attempting corruptly to influence a man about to be drawn as a juror.

The court also instructed that a verdict of guilty could not be found on the uncorroborated evidence of accomplices.

"Admission made to accomplices by the defendant should not be regarded as corroborative. The testimony of a feigned accomplice, however, does not require corroboration.

Darrow, his mobile face showing the wear and tear of the long months of anxiety, gazed steadily ahead of him, except when, for a moment, he turned to comfort his wife. For 31 minutes the suspense continued. Then a bail rang. A deputy sheriff elbowed his way through the crowd at the door. The jury was ready to come in. Slowly they made their way to the jury box. The foreman got to his feet.

"We, the jury," he read from a bit of paper in his hand, "find the defendant not guilty as charged in this indictment."

Watched Burglar Steal Her Jewelry.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Not daring to awaken her husband for fear that he might be shot and killed, Mrs. Walter F. Klemm, wife of a Philadelphia banker, with a summer home at Chelsea, lay awake and watched a burglar steal jewelry valued at more than $6,000 from a dressing table in her bedroom. She had awakened to see the burglar, disguised with a white silk handkerchief drawn over his face, removing the contents of her jewel case. The intruder was holding a large revolver in his hand.

He Went Gunning for Human Game.

Chicago.—"I'm going gunning," Michael Laporte told a porter in a barber shop, and within five minutes he had killed Luigi LaGrasso, seriously wounded Michael Granato and shot off the right arm of Mrs. Guiseppina Gallina, who was carrying a baby on her left arm. Laporte used a shotgun. Police pursued Laporte for several blocks and caught him after he had fired once at them. The friends of Laporte's victims gathered and commenced to attack him. They were dispersed by the police.

JEFFERSON LEVY

Congressman Jefferson Levy of New York, who inherited Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson, from his uncle, Commodore Levy, says he has no intention of selling it to the government, as has been suggested.

VOW TO DESTROY GRAFT

GREAT MEETING OF NEW YORK CITIZENS IS HELD IN COOPER UNION.

Speakers Declare That Civilization Is Challenged by the Developments That Have Come to Light.

New York.—The resolute determination of the citizens of New York to rir their police force of its system of graft and blackmail was given forcible expression at a mass meeting at vigilance committee of prominent men and women to see that public officers now engaged in exposing "the treasonable alliance of the police with organized crime" do their full duty.

The mass meeting, which typified the public indignation aroused by the revelations of police corruption growing out of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, was attended by a crowd that overflowed the hall. There were 4,000 persons in the auditorium with hundreds standing up, while blocking the streets outside were thousands more who clamored for admittance.

It was one of the largest "town meetings" held in the city in years, and there was no mistaking the earnestness which pervaded the gathering as it voiced its approval of the denunciation of the police "system" which prominent speakers on the program employed when speaking of existing conditions.

The resolution appointing the vigilance committee, which was given the power to increase its number to thirty and to solicit funds and to engage counsel called "upon the police department to put forth additional efforts looking to the arrest of all those implicated in the Roesnthal murder; upon the district attorney to bend every energy of his office, as has been doing, to the apprehension and conviction of those guilty of this crime; upon the aldermanic investigating committee to make a thorough, non-partisan and unsparing examination into existing conditions and into causes which give rise to systems of blackmail and graft and to propose remedies by which these causes may be removed, and upon the citizens and officials having information on these conditions to lay it before the district attorney or the aldermanic committee in the full confidence that they will be protected against terrorism and oppression of every sort."

Colquitt Nominated in Texas.

San Antonio, Texas.—A thirty-minute demonstration for United States Senator Joseph Weldon Bailey was the feature of the final session of the state Democratic convention. The demonstration arose over the adoption of a resolution commending Bailey for his course in congress. Gov. O. B. Colquitt was renominated and his platform adopted. Prominent in the platform is a declaration for closing the saloons at 9:30 o'clock every week day night.

$3,000,000 Baby Is Born.

New York.—Mrs. Madeline Force Atsor, survivor of the Titanic disaster, in which her husband, Col. John Jacob Astor, lost his life, has given birth to a son. The new arrival has been named John Jacob Astor after his father. The baby becomes a direct heir to $3,000,000 of the Astor fortune. News of the arrival of the Astor baby was made known in a bulletin issued by Dr. Edwin B. Craigin, the attending physician, which read: "Mrs. Astor has a son. His name is John Jacob Astor."

Army Measure Passed.

Washington.—The senate passed the army appropriation bill carrying $94,000,000, a bill replacing that originally passed which was vetoed by President Taft. The new bill did not carry the provision of the original which would have legislated out of official life Gen. Leonard Wood, the chief of staff of the army. An unsuccessful attempt was made by Senator Bacon to amend the appropriations so that not a dollar could be used to support the army if sent into foreign territory.

POPULAR SYMBOL OF VALUE

Young Man Evidently Was Lacking In His Appreciation of the Country's Statesmen.

There is plenty of food for cynical thoughts in the national capital, as is shown by the following incident which happened on a Washington street car:

A worldly young man, prone to criticise, was gazing at the advertisements which decorate the interior of the car. One advertised a new kind of collar for men. The dome of the capitol was represented encircled by one of the collars, and on the senate and house wings of the building were placards giving prices and sizes. The placard on the senate end of the capitol read, "Quarter size," and that on the other end said, "Two for a quarter."

The worldly cynical young man turned to his companion.

"That," he remarked, "just about expresses my opinion of some of these here congresmen."—Judge.

EAST RANDOLPH.

Rain in abundance has been the order of the past week.

Revival services this week at the Erven school house—let the work be thorough. Nothing short of a thorough work will be truly valuable—a work that makes people clean up both inside and out is thorough—a work that means back to the Bible way—that keeps people happy winter and summer, that produces such a change that you can detect the change without inquiry, that makes old church members get right and get into the work, makes them sing and get busy, takes away their abnormal appetites for narcotics, etc., kills their lethargy, makes them have opposition. You can't be just right under the present order of things and not be opposed; a work that makes preachers throw away the pipe and quid.

"Deeper yet into the crimson flood,
Deeper yet under the precious blood."

We had a good song service here last week taught by Prof. T. C. Jackson, of Collins chapel. The pupils made good progress. The professor endeared himself very much to the people here. We commend him heartily to any class. He is a very clear and painstaking teacher.

Judge Waldrup made one or two flying trips to Maplesville last week.

James Franklin, Jr., and Ben Gibson were over last week visiting the singing school; they were smiling and very busy; they had things going their way; Cupid's arrows were flying fast.

Hurrah for the "Little Weaver."

J. D. Hamilton has secured a position at Randolph.

Mr. James Nix, of Macedonia, died last week, the dreaded tuberculosis claiming him for a victim. He was a good, honest, harmless man and spent his life here. He was a good citizen. He was well aware of his approaching death and expressed himself freely as having performed the work given him to do. He professed salvation many years ago. His body was laid away in the Macedonia cemetery. Alas! he is gone, but not forever. The redemption price has been paid, and his being will be restored to life, clothed with a body suited to its environments. He will come forth in his own rank and order. His identity will not be lost. He will still be James Nix. So, looking into the future, we can think of the glorified church in her place of power and dominion, of the innumerable company before the throne, of perfect men and women inhabiting the new earth, all holy and happy, then somewhere among this saved throng of happy people we expect Mr. Nix to be found. So now, while death is doing such cruel work, scattering sorrow everywhere, yet death will be destroyed to never hurt humanity again.

"Eleven Rate Facts" Answered

Statement of Sydney J. Bowie in Reply to Recent Letter of W. D. Nesbitt

In the Birmingham Ledger of July 29th appears a long letter from Mr. W. D. Nesbitt, former Railroad Commissioner of Alabama, under appointment from Governor Comer, in which he sets out what he calls "Eleven Rate Facts," which he advises the shipper to paste in his hat, or keep conveniently on his desk, to refute the alleged wicked statements of those who might present the views of the railroad company.

He begins with a poetic quotation. I can paraphrase another distinguished writer by saying of Mr. Nesbitt's article that there are some important things in it, and there are some true things in it, but the important things are not true, and the true things are not important.

Even as Mr. Nesbitt begins, with poetical lines, he continues to the end with a liberal use of the poet's license in dealing with the facts. It is far from me to suggest, or imply, that Mr. Nesbitt has made any deliberate misrepresentations, but I do say that Mr. Nesbitt's treatment of this whole rate question has been superficial and one-sided. He has stated the question from the standpoint of a critic alone. I do not doubt that he has worked himself up to believe that the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company is a very bad corporation because it was not willing to accept dictation from him, and from his associates, in the last administration.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad company has felt that it had some rights in this controversy. It was furnishing the property that was to be used by the shippers and passengers, and it was bearing all the expense, and it believed it had the right to say something about what it should charge for the use of its property by its customers. It has never denied that the people, either through the state legislature or the federal congress had a right to require just and reasonable rates, but it has claimed the right to be heard in determining what those rates were, and it has denied and does deny the power of any legislature, or commission deriving its power from the legislature, to arbitrarily fix passenger or freight rates for it, without consultation with, or notice to it, and without even an opportunity to be heard on the subject in a court of justice.

It is impossible, for want of space, to deal in detail with all of Mr. Nesbitt's statements, in a single article, but the material statement contained in my article, to which Mr. Nesbitt's article purports, in part, to reply, was that the Ledger was in error in alluding to the Louisville & Nashville as charging the "old high freight rates in Alabama," while other roads "are satisfied to observe the rates fixed by the state."

The point intended to be shown in my article was that the "other roads" referred to were not satisfied with, nor were they, in fact, charging the rates required of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, but, on the contrary, the statutes referred to expressly discriminate in favor of the "other roads" and mention was made of certain specific instances of discrimination in the statute, which made the proposition plain. For example, on the articles mentioned in the "Eight Group Acts," except a limited number therein set out, the Southern Railway, the Atlantic Coast Line and the Seaboard Air Line were allowed to charge $1.25 for each $1.05 allowed to be charged by the Louisville & Nashville, while the Alabama Great Southern and the St. Louis & San Francisco and other roads were allowed to charge $1.20 for each $1.05 allowed to be charged by the Louisville & Nashville. The evidence in the cases lately tried showed that there was no basis in fact, or law, for this discrimination, and this was one of the grounds on which these statutes were declared unconstitutional.

Mr. Nesbitt does not deny this discrimination, but he undertakes to obscure, or minimize it, by showing that although the discrimination does exist as to some of the articles embraced in these acts, it does not exist as to all of them, and he mentions by name some of the articles on which he says there is no discrimination. A bank cashier could just as logically say that he ought not to be convicted of embezzlement, because, forsooth, he did not take all of the bank's money, having left some change in the cash drawer. Lord Clive, when on trial for robbing the Indian treasury, is reported saying, "My Lords, when I consider the opportunities afforded me, I am astonished at my own moderation."

The discrimination apparent on the face of these acts cannot be defended or brushed aside by showing that they contained some exceptions. Mr. Nesbitt's statement of these exceptions is not accurate, as an analysis of the acts themselves will show, nor is it true, as he claims, that these exceptions constitute seventy-five per cent. of the total tonnage embraced in the acts. I am sure he is mistaken in his allusion to the testimony on this point—I know the exceptions affect less than one-fourth in number of the articles, and thus, as to more than three-fourths of the articles named in the acts there is a plain discrimination against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad in favor of its competitors of from 15 to 45 per cent. I shall deal further with this matter in a separate article.

Mr. Nesbitt further speaks of the "burdensome freight rates," etc., "other than iron and coal," as if iron and coal constituted the only low freight rates on the Louisville & Nashville system.

I have asserted, on the authority of the undisputed testimony in the cases lately tried, that the Louisville & Nashville freight rates were on the whole materially lower than the rates charged by the Southern Railway and other competitors. To show that these low rates are not confined to iron and coal, I now submit a table showing the voluntary rates of the Southern Railway and L. & N. Railroad in Alabama as they existed January 1, 1907, and as they now exist, except as modified by the "Eight Group Acts," wherein on more than three-fourths of the articles a difference of 20 per cent. in favor of the Southern and against the Louisville & Nashville is created by statute. These rates apply to all-class articles. They govern the great body of merchandise and articles of general consumption, but do not apply to articles such as coal and iron ore, governed by what is known as commodity rates.

The rates for intermediate distances show relatively the same differences as are disclosed by the above table.

By the operation of the maximum Rate Acts the Southern Railway is permitted to charge the higher rates shown in this table while the Louisville & Nashville is prohibited from charging more than the lower rates shown.—Acts of 1907, p. 80.

The sole exceptions to the above table of rates are applied to class goods are found in the Eight Group Acts, where, on a limited number of articles, the rates of the Louisville & Nashville and the Southern are the same, but where on the great majority of articles a heavy discrimination exists in favor of the Southern Railway and other competitors.

If the Louisville & Nashville freight rates are "burdensome," if they are "old" and "high," what must be thought of the legalization of the rates of the Southern Railway shown by the above table and the discrimination in its favor in the "Eight Group Acts?" Can the gentlemen defend or excuse this situation?

The fact is, the Louisville & Nashville freight rates are "old," but they are neither "high" nor "burdensome." Under the operation of these rates, the community served by it have enjoyed a measure of prosperity much greater than it has enjoyed. The returns from these rates have been meager. It cannot be shown, it has not been shown, that they are excessive. On the whole, they are lower than the average of rates charged by its competitors in the states of Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi and Florida.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad company proposes these facts by evidence not disputed in the cases lately tried. If these statements were false, they were open to disproof. They were not refuted then; they cannot be refuted now.

In other articles, I shall deal with the situation in Georgia, with the question of a fair return, with the Passenger Rate Act, and with further evidences of discrimination in the Statutes of which we complain.

Progressive Clanton Needs A Progressive Administration

With a municipal election approaching now is a good time to take stock of our assets and liabilities in order that we may intelligently guide our course in the coming election. And at the outset we will say this article is not intended as a criticism of the present and past administrations, but is confined to facts which may easily be verified by any one desirous of learning the actual state of affairs in the town of Clanton.

In an old cook book the advice given as to the manner of cooking a hare was "First catch your hare," and in a similar way the question of what is the best way of disbursing the money raised by taxation—whether street improvement, sewerage, electric light, water supply, fire protection, or what not—may be answered by "First collect your taxes." And in this latter respect the Town of Clanton seems to be deficient.

With a taxable value of approximately $170,000.00 and a tax rate of one half of one per cent. the town should have an income of about $8,500.00 from real estate and personal property and this amount together with town licenses, street taxes, public school funds, and the taxes assessed in the Mayor's court would produce a handsome income ample for all purposes, for a growing town, like Clanton, as well as all the cash to which it is entitled, to enable it to keep pace with the rest of the world, and continue those improvements necessary to the comfort and well-being of its inhabitants.

Is the Town of Clanton collecting the taxes due to it? If not, why not? The town in an incorporation under the laws of the State, with duly elected officers who have all the necessary power to enforce the payment of taxes, the inhabitants are law-abiding citizens anxious and willing to comply with the law fairly and justly administered, and the Union-Banner firmly believes that just as soon as it is understood that the payment of taxes is an essential feature of citizenship then every taxpayer will promptly come forward with his quota and the financial machinery will glide smoothly along. But there can be no exceptions, each and every taxpayer must contribute his proportionate share to the expenses of the town; all alike partake of and enjoy and rejoice in, every improvement that takes place.

Compare the Clanton of today with the struggling village of a few short years ago. Prior to the incorporation of the town we had a few poorly built wooden houses scattered along an apology for a highway, with no sidewalks to speak of, and after a rain it was frequently impossible to cross the street in many places; after sundown friendly calls between neighbors, or attend an evening service at church, could only be accomplished by carefully picking your way amid the mud by the light of a lantern. Indian file, each one endeavoring to stop in the footprints of those preceding him. Main street, the principal thoroughfare of the town, was for a considerable portion lined on each side by a yawning ditch, along which the rushing waters would rise, and a false step procured an unpleasant bath, at the railroad crossing the rails were sometimes under water, through which unfortunate pedestrians waded; there was no accomodating bridge over Fourth avenue, and the crossing was usually in a muddy condition. Since the incorporation of the town the railroad company has raised the track and with the assistance of the incorporation has built the bridge.

"But as the sun went down" the few merchants closed their doors of business and retired to their homes, peacefully to rest and await the coming of another sundown. The footsteps of no policemen were ever heard in those days, vigilantly patroling the streets to guard your life and property; in case of trouble a deputy sheriff might be found, but it was well for every man to depend on himself and protect those dear to him. The clanging of the fire bell would at any time, day or night, immediately produce every available man within reach of its sound, and valiant efforts were put forth to stem the ravages of the fire fiend. Alas, in this respect we are still dependent upon the same means, no advance having been made, and we are paying extra good money in large sums for fire insurance in consequence. There was not one solitary brick building in town, all were of wood, generally of slight construction, and easily succombed to the devastating flames.

Fifteen years ago, in 1897, some of the leading men of Clanton, recognizing the future possibilities of the town, and realizing the impossibility of any advance in its prosperity under the then existing conditions, began to agitate for its incorporation. As was to be expected considerable opposition developed itself, there was not an incorporated town in Chilton, and there was an idea among the people that to live under an incorporation ment largely increased taxation and no, or very little, advantage to be gained. In spite of all opposition, however, the work was proceeded with, a charter of incorporation was granted by the legislature and the Town of Clanton took its place among the fair cities of Alabama. Patriotic citizens were elected for mayor and councilmen who cheerfully devoted the time necessary for conducting the affairs of the infant city, generously giving their services gratuitously. "The laboror is worthy of his hire" but these men unsparingly gave their time for the upbuilding of the town of Clanton.

And the town made progress—great progress. Compare the Clanton of today with the Clanton of fifteen years ago, and the contrast is marked. Today Clanton is a beautiful little city, a credit to its inhabitants, and an inspiration to the neighboring towns to go foward and do likewise. Well-formed streets, wide and spacious, in most cases adorned by beautiful shade trees; sidewalks in good condition that can be traversed by dainty feet at any time without detriment to dainty costumes; Main street well paved on both sides with a concrete sidewalk and the several crossings paved with brick, while a walk about town discloses the fact that a number of other streets have discovered the advantage of concrete as paving material. Night or day makes no difference to those who wish to travel, electric lights illumine the way, the old lantern is discarded or rologated to the suburbs, and police see that the way is left unobstructed for the wayfarer. In the business portion of the town handsome brick storehouses have taken the place of the old frame buildings, well stocked with goods that it is a pleasure to look at when taking a stroll after supper and the stores are brilliantly aglow with electric light making the streets as bright as day. Elegant private residences have been erected in all directions, standing proudly amidst lovely flower yards, and after the cares of the day are over how pleasantly neighbor calls upon neighbor in the gloaming, carelessly walking to a brillantly lighted homestead, along well lighted thoroughfares, safe from all alarm.

And all this has been accomplished within the last few years, since Clanton became an incorporated town, and practically at the same cost to the citizens as under the old conditions. Would it be thus if the town had never incorporated but had continued to

MODERN ARMS IN THE SUDAN

Somebody Supplying Tribesmen With Up-to-Date Weapons—Formerly Used Spears.

London.—News has been received from Abyssinia suggesting the presence in the Sudan of some adventurers who are arming and drilling tribes hitherto savage and unprovided with any weapons but the bow and spear.

Large quantities of rifles and ammunition have reached these tribes. The region chiefly affected is that between northern Uganda, the western border of Abyssinia and the southeastern corner of Anglo-Egyptian Sudan.

The rifles are of French manufacture and stamped with the date 1879, but it is declared that many of them are in reality quite new.

During the recent British operations under Major Leveson against the Anuaks in the Sudan, wild and practically naked tribes were all found to be armed with similar rifles, which had replaced their traditional spears and shields.

The savages had evidently been trained. They were clothed only in beads plus new bandeliers of cartridges, and it was remarkable that words of command were heard to be given by Gallas and Arabs to savages who had never before shown any signs of dicipline or training.

SPECIAL DAYS AT ALABAMA STATE FAIR.

Special days at the Alabama State Fair are rapidly being set and in the course of a few days the entire calendar will be full. Four have already been set and the societies and organizations fostering them are at work boosting them.

Saturday, October 5th, has been named as Woman's Suffrage Day, distinctly a new departure for fairs. The Samaria Sunday morning.

Alabama State Fair is the first Fair in the United States to take this step. It is being given under the auspices of the Equal Suffrage League of Birmingham. They have arranged for speakers of national and international reputation to be here and make speeches on that day.

Tuesday, October 8th, will be Farmers Day, on which day the "horny handed sons of toil" will rule supreme at the Alabama State Fair grounds.

Thursday, October 10th, is to be Good Roads Day, and enthusiasts of the improvement of the highways of the State are taking hold in good faith and are working hard to make it a red letter day in the annals of road improvement.

Friday, October 11th, is Children's Day. The schools of the city are taking part in this and will make it an interesting time not only for the little folks, but for the grown-ups as well.

On Saturday, October 12th, the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus will be celebrated by the Italians of the State. This day will be called Christopher Columbus Day. The Italian societies of the Birmingham district always prepare elaborate programs on that day and their parade through the streets of Birmingham are possibly the most gorgeous ever seen in the South.

Other days are under consideration now and in a few days it is expected that a full program will be announced.

MINISTERS CONFERENCE.

Ther will be a Ministers conference at Sardis church, of Chilton County Association, Saturday before the fifth Sunday in September, 1912. The program will be published later. The brethren will take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Big Convention Expected Great Results Anticipated

The convention to be held at Clanton on Friday, August 30, is one of the greatest importance—one that vitally affects the material interests of every one within our borders. It is a gathering of the people to take a decisive step, the formation of a new party which promises to improve the conditions under which we live.

The dissatisfaction with the two old parties—Republican and Democratic—both of which have been long and earnestly tried and found wanting, has culminated in the formation of the national Progressive Party, and some five hundred of the independent voters of Chilton have signed a petition for the establishment of the Progressive Party in our county.

With such a demand it is only reasonable to expect a large attendance, marked with a degree of enthusiam seldom seen at political meetings, and from all reports the meeting at Clanton on Friday promises to develop a unanimity among our people that has been lacking for several years.

The call is an open one, the invitation is an open one, and every man, no matter what his past political affiliations may have been, who is not satisfied with existing political conditions, may at this meeting give expression to his desires. The platform of the Progressive Party is fair, full and comprehensive, adapted to our present needs, and the promise of fulfilment is excellent at this time.

Some notable speakers have promised to be present, including Judge Longshore, of Shelby, Hon. R. J. Perryman, of Heflin, and others from whom good addresses are to be expected, and we look forward to a gala day in Clanton. Nominations by the new party will be among the principal orders of business and there is every reason why every man who possibly can do so should be present. Lastly, a brass band has been engaged and music will be in the air.

All dissatisfied voters of the old parties, and their name is legion, can unite in the Progressive Party.

STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

The state executive commitee of the Progressive Party met in Birmingham Saturday and after choosing electors and adopting a party emblem, instructed the chairman, R. J. Perryman of Heflin, to open campaign headquarters in Birmingham this week.

The executive committee as a nucleus for a campaign fund subscribed $1000.

The electors chosen follow: J. R. Vidner of Mobile, First district; J. M. Greene of Bay Minette, Second district; E. P. Johnston of Geneva, Third district; R. J. Perryman of Heflin, Fourth district; John Allen of Prattville, Fifth district; W. T. McElroy of Carbon Hill, Sixth district; J. A. Martin of Boaz, Seventh district; W. T. Roberts of Guarley, Eighth district; J. A. Lavert of Birmingham, Ninth district: E. A Phillips of Leeds, Sumter Cogswell of Pell City and Samuel M Adams of Clanton, from the state at large.

Judge Adams, in declining the nomination, stated that while he is in sympathy with the platform and objects of the Progressive Party he will shortly be in Florida, where he has recently purchased an orange grove which needs his personal attention.

The emblem adopted consists of a circle out of which emerges the head of a moose and around which is written, "Pass Prosperity Around".

Chairman Perryman was authorized to name a campaign committee to consist of one member from each of the congressional districts. This he will do this week prior to opening headquarters in Birmingham.

PROGRESSIVES WIN FIRST VICTORY.

The first election held in Alabama since the inauguration of the new party was at Flomaton in Escambia County, where the entire Progressive ticket was elected and hailed with acclamation.

COUNTY EDUCATIONAL BOARD.

The County Educational board of Chilton County will be in session at Clanton on the first Friday in October, November and December, 1912, and first Friday in January, 1913.

Wm. J. Billingsley, Chairman.
J. C. Veazey, Secretary.

ROAD CONTRACTS ARE APPROVED

HIGHWAY COMMISSION AUTHORIZES EXPENDITURE OF $66,450.

EIGHT COUNTIES BENEFITED

Highway Commission Lays Tentative Plans For Increased Activities In Future.

Montgomery. — "State-aid roads," provided by the bill which created and empowered the State Highway Commission, will be constructed in eight counties of the State, according to contracts let by the Commission at a special session. The contracts aggregate, in amount, $66,450, and range, respectively, from $4,000 to $17,000.

"State-aid roads" are those which, deemed by the Commission necessary to better intercourse and travel, may be constructed by funds in which the State supplements the county appropriations. The eight counties for road work in which contracts were let, are: Lee, $8,000; Franklin, $12,000; Blount, $4,000; Russell, $5,400; Elmore, $8,000; Coffee, $8,000; Butler, $17,000. In nearly all the counties in which contracts were awarded the State will contribute one-half the amount needed, except in Butler and Franklin Counties.

In Franklin County, $4,000 will be contributed from the State-aid fund; $4,000 by the county, and a similar amount by the people. In Butler County, in which the contracts call for $17,000, the State will contribute $4,000, the county $10,000 and other sources $3,000.

In addition to approving the several contracts, the Highway Commission went into a discussion of the work of the Highway Department, and laid tentative plans for increased activities in the future.

It was agreed to send the good road models, which belong to the Highway Department, to the meeting of the Alabama State Good Roads Association, which will be held in Birmingham October 8, 9 and 10. State Highway Engineer W. S. Keller, John Craft, and other members of the Commission will probably attend the Birmingham meeting.

The Commission further agreed to send Engineer Keller and Captain Craft to the annual meeting of the American Roads Congress, which will convene at Atlantic City, September 30, for a six days' session.

Engineer Keller has been asked to deliver an address at this meeting on the subject of road building, with reference to the use of earth, clay, sand and other materials.

TO RECLAIM SCHOOL LANDS.

Movement Looking to Reclamation of Such Land is Under Way.

Montgomery.—The heritage of boys and girls of Alabama has been squandered to a large extent through indifference of the citizens, into whose trust it was given, and the laxity of official custodians, says W. J. Martin, State Land Agent. He issued an open letter to the people of Alabama requesting the aid of each individual toward the recovery of school lands which have been summarily taken by settlers, and toward obtaining compensation for depredations on their timber or mineral wealth.

The letter follows a recently launched movement by Attorney General Brickell, and H. J. Willingham, Superintendent of Education, who have undertaken to recover the lands. In the letter, Mr. Martin deplores the loss of the lands, which he calls "trust founds" of the people of the State. Through long neglect, he says, the lands have become "no man's land," the base of illegal trespass, timber cutting, or other use as it was adapted to. The letter, which will be printed and sent as a folder in the department's official letters, requests that citizens in possession of facts or information, or documents, which will lead to a determination of the ownership of the lands, and to a basis of action for recovery of damages inflicted to the lands by timber or mining vandals, send such information to the department.

75 PER CENT CROP PRESENT OUTLOOK.

Conditions Must Remain Favorable, However Until Winter.

Montgomery.—Farmers, after a period of nerve-racking anxiety concerning their cotton crop, are now gloating over the prospects of producing a fair enough amount of cotton after all. They have recovered their buoyancy, and from every part of the State reports come telling of a great improvement in the crop during the last two weeks or so, an improvement engendered by just enough rain and no more, by seasonable hot weather, and by every other favorable circumstance.

True, the crop will be short. There is hardly a report that does not admit the fact that the crop is off from 10 to 25 per cent from normal. And yet, when it is considered that a month ago the farmers expected a crop far worse than one of a meagre 25 per cent deficiency, that the relative prosperity has warmed their hearts to optimistic exultation.

And yet, with all the optimism, the production of a satisfactory crop hinges upon one thing. Conditions must remain favorable, and the winter must be late. An early spell of coolness with its frost is more than likely to injure the crop to a great degree. Farmers are praying that the frost will be delayed.

From here and there comes the report that conditions are not as they should be, but these reports are from restricted areas. For instance, about Fort Deposit a terrific rain and wind storm has injured cotton to a great extent, so that farmers of the immediate vicinity of the town believe they will make only a 50 per cent crop. But for every bad report there is a good one as reciprocal, with the great balance expressing satisfaction and hope.

The boll weevil is reported from Escambia county, but in not enough quantities, says the correspondent, to injure the crop. Neither have other pests injured the crop in Alabama to any extent, according to most of the correspondents, although caterpillars and other undesirable visitors have been reported extensively.

The crop is spotted badly in most parts of the State. That is, it is good in some places, while neighboring fields may have produced an inferior plant. This is due to difference in fertilizers, difference in soils, and variations in the visitations of the weather.

Cotton is blooming everywhere, and is being picked in most places in the State.

WAREHOUSES MAKE MONEY.

Only 1 Out of 30 Fails to Succeed, According to Reports at Anniston.

Anniston.—Out of 25 or 30 warehouses in the state represented at a meeting of the Farmers' union at the courthouse, the report showed that only one of these warehouses had failed to make money. All the rest had declared a satisfactory dividend. The managers were represented by managers or proxy, and the concensus of opinion was that the business of the past year had been very satisfactory indeed, with bright prospects for the future season.

The farm demonstration work was indorsed by the committee in this important project, and larger funds from the federal government for the further extension of this movement were asked. Committees on good roads, warehouses, farm demonstration work and co-operation all made favorable reports.

PENSION LAWS CRITICIZED.

"They Are Vague and Contradictory," Says Report of State Board.

Montgomery.—Criticism of the pension laws and recommendations looking to the establishment of an executive department of pension examiners are the principal features of a report submitted to Governor O'Neal by the State Board of Pension Examiners. The report comes after a ten-days' meeting of the board, and announces the addition of 1,058 names to the pension roll.

Alabama Centennial Discussed.

Montgomery.—Whether or not Alabama should hold a centennial celebration in 1919 will be determined by a committee of fifty-four men appointed by Governor O'Neal. There is a plan on foot in local circles to hold a celebration similar to the one held in Nashville, Tenn., several years ago. Dr Thomas M. Owen director of the State Department of Archives and History, was appointed temporary chairman of the committee. Other members are from other sections of the State.

Greenville.—Ex-Gov. B. B. Comer will deliver an address in Greenville on August 30. The address will be made at the Butler county courthouse.

Four Institutes Convene.

Montgomery.—Four teachers' institutes are being held in state this week. The institutes at Marion and Livingston are probably the most largely attended, inasmuch as the former has teachers in attendance from the counties of Perry and Hale, and the latter is for the counties of Sumter and Greene. Other institutes are being held at Tuscaloosa, for Tuscaloosa county; Bentreville, for Bibb county, and at Camden for Wilcox county.

BAR ASSOCIATION DENOUNCES RECALL

WOULD DEPRIVE PUBLIC OF JUDGES OF ABILITY AND CHARACTER.

RACE QUESTION IS SETTLED

Three Negroes, Now Members, Allowed to Retain Seats—Race Must Be Indicated.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Fifty-four lawyers with at least one from each state, completed for presentation to the American Bar Association a report denouncing as "dangerous to the country" all movements for the recall of judges or of judicial decisions.

The report cities that in Ohio the constitutional convention declined to apply the recall to the judges, but provided that laws should be passed for prompt removal on complaint and hearing of judges for any misconduct involving moral turpitude. The report says this substantially is the system used in Massachusetts, New York and several other states.

"We are pleased to report," says the committee, "that the bar associations of many states have taken action opposed to the principle of judicial recall. In numerous other states action undoubtedly will be taken.

"We maintain that the recall applied to judges will tend to deprive the public of judges of ability, character, high sense of duty and a due regard to enlightened public sentiment, and that such a judiciary is absolutely necessary to the existence of a constitutional democracy.

"The application of the recall to an ordinary official may be a question of expediency but it is not fundamentally wrong. To apply it to the judiciary is in violation of the principles of government which ages of experience have demonstrated to be wise. In the states and in the fedral government we have the right of impeachment and in several of the states the right of removal of a judge by the legislature. If the right of impeachment is not sufficient, an adequate remedy can be created for the removal of a judge for conduct inconsistent with his office after complaint is made and he is given an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. In this way the independence of the judiciary is maintained and a judge is removed simply for incapacity or misconduct in office.

"The advocates of this system claim that it is in the interest of the common people. This we deny. For more than 300 years the greatest bulwark for the protection of the mass of the people has been courts. There never was a time in our country when any man, however poor or humble, could not apply to the courts and be assured of protection. Is it any reproach upon the courts that they have extended the same protection to the rich and powerful when assailed by popular prejudice."

Ten minutes was devoted to settlement of the question whether negro lawyers should be admitted to membership. A resolution presented by Mr. Dickinson was adopted, providing that hereafter, when a negro is nominated for membership his race must be indicated to the executive committee.

Attorney General George W. Wickersham, declared the resolution created a permanent member of William H. Lewis, an assistant to the Attorney General, who, with two other negro lawyers, had been unseated by the executive committee because of their race. Lewis, Butler R. Wilson of Boston and William R. Morris of Minneapolis were then said to be regularly seated.

Many endeavored to discuss the subject but the motion was carried before they were recognized.

MISSISSIPPI CONGRESSMEN

Practically Complete Returns Show Nomination of Present Incumbents in First, Fifth and Eighth Districts.

Jackson, Miss.—Practically complete returns from democratic congressional primaries held in the First, Fifth and Eighth Mississippi districts show in each instance the renominaton of the incumbents. In the First district Representative E. S. Candler defeated Dr. H. F. Broyle, in the Fifth Representative S. A. Witherspoon has a majority over three opponents. R. H. Henry, of Jackson was defeated by J. W. Collier in the Eighth district.

BLEASE LEADING JUDGE JONES.

Indications Are That Senator Tillman Has Been Renominated.

Columbia, S. C.—With approximately 15,000 votes to hear from in various parts of the state, Governor Blease's majority is 407 in a total vote of more than 111,000.

Indications that United States Senator Benjamin R. Tillman has been renominated over W. J. Talbert and N. B. Dial.

RAILROADS PLACE ADVANCE ORDERS

Business Outlook Never Better in Years—Big Steel Demand.

New York.—R. G Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

With crop prospects increasingly brilliant, with the principal industries working to full normal capacity, with trade distribution continuously expanding and with business sentiment becoming daily more and more confident and buoyant the whole situation, both in fundamental conditions and in volume of transactions, is better than it has been for years.

The problems now are not those of depression but becoming those of prosperity. It is no longer a shortage of orders but of capacity to supply demand, and in som ecases consumers offer premiums for prompt delivery. A shortage of labor not alone in the wheat fields, but in some of the industries, is reported. The railroads are buying liberally of supplies and are placing heavy advance orders but there is a prospect of shortage of cars to carry the traffic of the country. It is noticeable that merchants are now disposed to buy more freely for advance needs. High or unsettled prices still, however, complicate conditions in some trades.

Although the dry goods trade is very active, especially in the west, south and northwest, yet there is considerable disposition in cotton goods to await more stability in the price of raw cotton. Shoe trade is retarded by the continued high prices of leather and hides.

From the iron and steel industry nothing but the most favorable reports are forthcoming, plants are working to capacity, stocks of pig iron are being reduced and the demand by the railroads and other consumers is large and urgent.

The best reflection of the prevailing activity in the steel mills is the readiness of buyers to pay premiums for prompt delivery but many of the larger corporations are opposed to the acceptance of this premium business believing that a rapid advance in quotations would militate against the prosperous conditions that now prevail.

Building operations are active. The copper market reflects the prevailing advancing state of trade and the current use of copper by some of the largest consumers is said to be the heaviest on record. The hardware trade is pointing toward increased activity.

New Yoork.—Bradstreets review of trade says:

Expansion is the key word of the trade situation as the month draws to a close and buyers feel the sensational spur to the laying in of supplies for fall and winter. This, of course, largely predicated upon the prospect of assured or expected large crop yields and finds chief expression in the west, northwest and southwest, where crop certainty has generally speaking supplanted prediction.

Coincidently with the marketing with the early gathered crops, collections show a tendency to improve and the money market likewise gives evidence of increased activity and strength of quotations. Perhaps the only possible check to full present or near future activity is found in the gradually enlivening political campaign, but it is a matter of widespread remark that political discussion is apparently given less than expected weight.

Trade demand has expanded noticeably in dry goods, lumber, coal, wool, shoes, leather and last, but by no means least, in iron and steel, where higher prices have aparently not acted as a bar to further booking. Most pronounced activity is reported at the northwest and it is interesting to note that Chicago reports the best week's buying of dry goods for five years past. Eastern markets, too, such as Boston and New York, report more doing in this and other lines and all markets agree in the report that buyers are visible in large numbers. Southern trade reports are not equal to those of the north, but this is explainable because of the longer distance that that section's staple crop has to traverse before it can be esteemed safe.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending August 22, were 264 against 221 last week, 198 in the like week of 1911, 235 in 1910, 201 in 1909 and 236 in 1908. Business failures in Canada for the week are 20 as compared with 36 last week and 39 in the like week of 1911.

Wheat, including flour, exports from the United States and Canada for the week ending August 22, aggregate 3,838,569 bushels against 4,273,948 last week and 3,422,476 this week last year. For the eight weeks ending August 22, exports are 22,377,658 bushels against 20,151,183 in the corresponding period last year. Corn exports for the week are 57,285 bushels against 121,627 last week and 329,610 in 1911. For the eight weeks ending August 22 corn exports are 702,456 bushels against 4,345,730 last year.

SPARKS FROM THE WIRES.

Washington.—It is believed here that Coolnel Roosevelt will take the stand within a few days before the Senate sub-committee investigating campaign expenditures, to answer charges made by John D. Archbold that Mr. Roosevelt had knowledge of the use of Standard Oil money in his campaign of 1904.

Terre Haute, Ind.—Three boys were killed and four fatally hurt on the Southern Indiana Belt junction near here when a southbound passenger train ran into them.

STATE BRIEFS.

Birmingham Buy quick for the first quarter of next year at $12.50, is the advice of local pig iron dealers, according to official reports gathered in local iron circles. The price of pig iron may go as high as $13 for deliveries next year, it is said.

The market is the strongest in many months and promises to become stronger. One local dealer said he would not be surprised at all to see No. 2 go to $13 right away. This is $3 in excess of the price charged for pig of the No. 2 grade less than six months ago.

Several large orders are understood to have been placed by local pig iron dealers within the last few days One company has just completed a deal for 50,000 tons to be delivered this fall and has also negotiated for 15,000 tons for the first quarter of next year at $12.50. A 60,000 ton sale is also said to have been made to a local cast iron pipe company by a local producer on the basis of $12.50 for No. 2 and other large sales are pending, it is said.

Greensboro.—The annual convention of the Hale County Sunday School Association opened at Mount Hermond Church August 29th for a two days' session. The program for the first session consisted of an address by Leon C. Palmer, secretary of the Alabama Sunday School Association; talks by Rev. Dr. D. W. Hollingsworth and Rev. Raimundo de Ovies, and the annual reports of the county secretary, Frank G. Gulley, and the treasurer, Edgar M. Elliott.

Birmingham.—Praying "Jesus, I give my heart and soul to you; I ain't going to die no more," Armstead White, murderer of four men, expiated his crime on the gallows of the Jefferson county jail. The trap was sprung by the sheriff just as the ninth stroke of the big courthouse clock sounded the hour of 11, and exactly 14 minutes later White was pronounced dead by Dr. Hamrick, one of three attending physicians. His neck was broken.

Florence.—An election was held here August 29, to decide whether or not this city will adopt the commission form of government. The result of the election has not yet been announced. It was predicted, however, that the commission government would be defeated.

Decatur.—This town will, within the next few months, be well fixed in the hotel line. Two commodious hotels are now in course of erection.

Athens.—The city schools opened with appropriate exercises. The enrollment this year promises to be larger than last.

Mobile.—The business men of this city are planning an advertising trip through the West Indies and Windward Islands in the interest of Mobile trade.

Huntsville.—Plans for the remodeling of the Southern railway depot have been received here and the work will begin as soon as a sufficient force of men can be collected.

Mobile.—A monument to Father Ryan, Mobile's poet-priest, is to be erected in Ryan Park.

Evergreen.—This town received its first bale of cotton this year. It was sold for 11 3-4 cents.

Montgomery.—School trustees for Castleberry, Conecuh County, were appointed by Governor O'Neal. These officers fill elective positions, but no provision was made at the last election for naming trustees. Those appointed are: Dr. L. W. Kirkland, E. Downing, Jr., P. M. Skinner, Allen Cage, J. R. Mathews, Jr.

Jasper.—An oil and gas company of Pennsylvania, which has had a force of men here boring for natural gas and oil wells, have got on a splendid flow of gas from two wells within a mile of Jasper and are preparing to bore for the third well. The first natural flow of gas was secured several months ago and now they have a second well operating nicely, giving a splendid and strong volume of gas.

Fort Payne.—The Oil Company, which was organized early in the spring, has just received two car loads of machinery which will be put in operation at once boring for oil in this county. Quite a good deal of prospecting has been done by expert oil men and they claim that there will be no difficulty in finding oil in paying quantities.

Demopolis.—The first bale of new cotton received at this market this season, came in from Linden and was sold for 12 cents.

Luverne.—Declaring with his last breath that he loved and forgave his wife, who shot and mortally wounded him, J. C. Goodwin, who resided near Glenwood, died. The wounded man and his wife became reconciled before his death and she did all she could to prolong his life.

Marion.—It is reported the Union warehouse, operated by the Farmers' union of Terry county, will be dissolved and only one warehouse operated here.

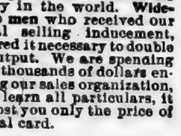
Selling Victor Safes and fire-proof boxes to merchants, doctors, lawyers, dentists and well-to-do farmers, all of whom realize the need of a safe, but do not know how easy it is to own one. Salesmen declare our proposition one of the best, clean-cut money-making opportunities ever received. Without previous experience YOU can duplicate the success of others. Our handsomely illustrated 200-page catalog will enable you to present the subject to customers in as interesting a manner as though you were piloting them through our factory. Men appointed as salesmen receive advice and instructions for selling safes, giving convincing talking points which it is impossible for a prospective customer to deny. Why don't YOU be the first to apply from your vicinity before someone else gets the territory? We can favor only one salesman out of each locality.



The 25th anniversary of our company was celebrated by erecting the most modern safe factory in the world. Wide-awake men who received our special selling inducement, rendered it necessary to double our output. We are spending many thousands of dollars enlarging our sales organization, but to learn all particulars, it will cost you only the price of a postal card.

CONGRESS CLOSES ITS LONG SESSION

SENATE YIELDED ON THE GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL AND "STATE CLAIMS" STRUCK.

END MARKED BY HARMONY

Only a Few Members Present When the Session Came to a Close.

Washington.—Sobered by the embarrassments of an all-night session of filibusters and disagreements, congress adjusted its differences, invited President Taft up to the capitol once more and wrote "finis" after the proceedings of the second session of the Sixty-second congress.

The end was marked with a return of harmony. Senator LaFollette, demanding action on the Penrose campaign fund resolution, found all opposition smoothed away in front of him and the resolution passed almost without discussion.

Senators Chamberlain, Martin, Swanson and Culberson, after fighting bitterly for the payment of the "state claims," embodied in the general deficiency bill, yielded to the urgings of their colleagues and permitted the senate to yield to the demands of the house, and strike these claims from the bill. In return for this concession, however, they received the promise of support next winter, when the claims again will be pressed for payment.

With these old claims, amounting in all to $600,000, went the "extra months" pay for congressional employees which the senate demanded and the house refused to give.

In the last half hour of the session, while President Taft waited in his special room to sign the measures of the dying congress, an attempt wa smade to rush through a special resolution giving the employees the "extra month," but the house again block it.

The president signed the general deficiency bill, making certain the payment of the $1,800,000 deficiency in army pay, the $150,000 for the Gettysburg memorial celebration next year, the $350,000 for extension of customs work and scores of other important payments that hinged on the passage of the bill.

A wild outburst of applause greeted Speaker Clark's announcement of adjournment as his gavel fell in the house. The floor immediately became an animated scene, members bidding each other goodbye and shaking hands. Old-time political foes buried all differences, and all feuds apparently were forgotten in the general leave-taking.

Further animation and color was left to the scene when the women flocked down from the galleries to join husbands and fathers on the floor. The corridors were crowded with tired but happy members and their families and friends, and Speaker Clark's room was crowded with friends and admirers.

Just before he announced the adjournment, Speaker Clark addressed the house:

"As the hour of adjournment approaches," he said, "the speaker desires to congratulate the house on having reached the end of one of the longest and most laborious sessions on record. Congress has been actually in session more days since December than any congress that has ever sat. The speaker desires to thank all members on both sides of the big aisle, which separates us politically but not as friends or patriots, for the uniform courtesy with which they have treated the speaker. I hope that we will all reach home safely, all have enjoyable vacations and will all return, refreshed and invigorated for our work next winter."

Taft Goes to Beverly.

Washington.—Within an hour after the adjournment of congress President Taft was on his private car bound for Beverly and a vacation he expects will be broken but little until December. The white house is practically deserted, for Major Thomas L. Rhodes, the president's personal aide, and most of the office employees left with the president.

Nicaragua Is Taxing Resources.

Washington.—The navy's resources on the Pacific coast have been drawn upon to such an extent that should further trouble be encountered in Nicaragua beyond the power of the present forces now there or en route to cope with, or should some of the American lives or interests in other Central or South American countries be jeopardized the army will be called upon to assist the marines. The tenth infantry, now on the Panama canal zone, would be the first to answer the call.

Mail on Sunday Thing of Past.

Washington.—If you have been accustomed to going to the postoffice on Sunday and getting your mail, or looking for it at your hotel, take notice: "Hereafter postoffices of the first an dsecond class shall not be open Sundays for the purpose of delivering mail to the general public, but this provision shall not prevent the prompt delivery of special delivery mail." That is the language of the postoffice appropriation bill which has just passed congress.

STANARD OIL MAN TESTIFIES

ARCHBOLD BRANDS ROOSEVELT AS BEING INSPIRED BY SPIRIT OF PERSONAL REVENGE.

Ex-President Points Out That Accusations Against Him Are on Hearsay Evidence.

Washington.—John D. Archbold, directing head of the Standard Oil company, testifying under oath before a senate committee, said that the refusal of the company to contribute $150,000 to the Republican national campaign committee in 1904, after they had given $125,000, brought down upon their heads the wrath of Theodore Roosevelt and their subsequent misfortunes.

He gave Senator Penrose a clean bill of health and corroborated in every particular statements made by the senator in his speech.

Oyster Bay, N. Y.—Colonel Roosevelt sat on the porch at Sagamore Hill for an hour and a half and dictated a statement in reply to the testimony of John D. Archbold before the senate investigating committee.

He reiterated his declaration that he knew nothing of a contribution by Mr. Archbold or the Standard Oil company to the Republican campaign of 1904; declared that he did not "for one moment believe that Mr. Archbold's testimony is truthful;" charged Mr. Archbold with a "wicked assault on a dead man;" added that during many calls which Mr. Archbold made upon him while he was president to urge him not to prosecute the Standard Oil company, Mr. Archbold never referred to any contribution to his campaign fund; and concluded with the suggestion that the senate committee should make both Mr. Archbold and Senator Penrose testify at once concerning their relations while Mr. Penrose was a member of the industrial commission.

MORE N. Y. GRAFTERS IN NET

Detective Flynn's Home Broken Into in Effort to Steal Evidence.

New York.—When the grand jury which is probing into graft in the police department revealed by the assassination of Gambler Herman Rosenthal, reassembles, sensational evidence is expected to be presented concerning the recent financial operations of a police inspector and a high civilian employee of the department.

This announcement was made at District Attorney Whitman's office, where preparations are under way for resumption of the inquiry.

Attaches of the district attorney's office are investigating what is believed to have been an attempt to steal evidence of grafting in the police department by breaking into the home of William Flynn, chief of the eastern division of the United States secret service.

One-Sixth of Canal to Dig.

Washington.—The figures showing the amount of excavation to be done on the Panama canal indicate that the great work was five-sixths finished on August 1, but there actually remain 16,903,000 cubic yards more earth to be removed than had been estimated for a year before. The apparent backward movement is explained in the official record by a large amount of silt age in the canal bed, which must be removed from the finished tunnels and also by the necessity for extensive excavation.

Burglars Make Hotel of Home.

Macon, Ga.—When L. I. Waxelbaum returned home after an absence of four or five days, he found that his home had been converted into a hotel for burglars. The unbidden guests had evidently been making the most of their sojourn and had taken their time in ransacking the house for valuables. They had taken a mattress from one of the beds and placing it on the floor had apparently rested from their labors long enough to play a few games of cards and consume a goodly part of [illegible]

Sparrow Sets House Afire.

An English sparrow was the cause of three houses catching fire at Lawrenceburg, Ind., recently, and had it not been for the prompt work of the neighbors and friends all would have been destroyed. The sparrow was building a nest under the eaves of the home of Mrs. Mary Webber, and it picked up a long cotton string from a pile of rubbish that had just been burned. With the burning string in its beak, the sparrow flew to the roof of Mrs. Sophia Shafer's house, then to Otto McCright's house and then to the roof of Emanuel Wuest's home, where it dropped the burning string. A fire started in the shingles of each building. Each was extinguished by neighbors before much damage was done.

After considerable sparring Congress managed to adjourn Monday and the country gives a sigh of relief.

Some five million new voters are to be reckoned with in November, how will they vote is what is agitating the politicians.

Governor Comer makes some important admissions in a letter addressed to Hon. Theodore Roosevelt. For the first time within our remembrance the truth of Kolb's election in 1892 is told by a Democratic ex-Governor. We await some more interesting admissions.

DEMOCRATIC ENTHUSIASM IN CHILTON.

"EVERYTHING LOOKS LOVELY"

That the enthusiasm, or to put it mildly, the goodwill of the Democrats of Chilton is of a lukewarm description the following report of a Democratic correspondent to a Democratic newspaper is sufficient evidence:

From the Birmingham Age-Herald, August 24, 1912.

CLANTON DEMOCRATS MEET AND ADJOURN.

Clanton, August 24.—After a well advertised call for a meeting of the democrats in Clanton to organize a Wilson and Marshall club, there met at the courthouse tonight 16 gentlemen, six of whom were not residents of the town. They assembled in response to the call, and of the number in attendance none the county or town elective officer was present. After waiting a reasonable length of time they adjourned without taking any action.

From the Clanton Press, Aug. 22, 1912.

The democratic executive committee met in enthusiastic session last Saturday with the local candidates and arranged a program for the coming campaign. Everything looks lovely for Wilson, Marshall, Blackmon, Thornton, Oden and the other democratic boys in this neck of the woods.

And there you are; comment is unnecessary. You pay your money and you take your choice.

Unexpected Flippancy.

We hardly look for humor in a medical dictionary, yet one recently published defines "shout" as "an unpleasant noise produced by overstraining the throat, for which great singers are paid well and small children are punished."

The Call of the Cuckoo.

Superstitious young women in some parts of the world are nervous when they hear the first cuckoo's call in the spring. For they believe that they will remain single as many years as the bird utters his call when they first hear him.

CLANTON'S FIRST BALE.

Clanton received its first bale of this season's cotton Wednesday evening, August 28. It was brought in by Mr. J. W. Gibson, weighed 455 pounds, and was purchased by W. I. Mullins at 11 cents per pound.

This is 6 days later than last year's first bale.

TEACHERS ELECTED.

The School Board met Friday night and completed their faculty for the Clanton High School by electing Miss Susie Cunningham, of Birmingham, as primary teacher, and Miss Margaret Watson as music teacher.

Miss Cunningham is a niece of Dr. R. M. Cunningham, late Lieutenant Governor of the State. Her father was the late J. B. Cunningham, principal of the Birmingham High school, editor of the Educational Exchange, and president of the Southern Educational Association. Besides being a graduate of the Birmingham High School, in both the academic and professional courses, Miss Cunningham has spent several summers in New York city and other places in the East. We congratulate the Board on securing the services of this accomplished young lady.

Miss Watson is so well known to our readers that it is unnecessary for us to add any word in her favor; she made such an excellent reputation when with us last year that all are glad to welcome her back again.

ALABAMA STATE FAIR.

The Directors of the Alabama State Exposition to be held in Montgomery in October have just given out the most optimistic advance statements ever issued during the history of the Association. Never before so long in advance has every foot of space been taken by exhibitors and concessionaires. No other Exposition held in the Capital City has held so much promise of instruction, entertainment and pleasure.

The educational importance of these annual exhibitions to the farmer is being more and more realized and demonstrated by the wonderful increase in number of farmers who are adopting scientific methods of cultivation. The management of the Alabama State Exposition have made arrangements to have representatives both of the Agricultural Department at Washington and the faculty at Auburn to lecture upon all subjects of interest to the farmer, agriculture, horticulture, livestock, poultry, etc.

The railroads leading into Montgomery have been most generous in their schedule of rates and it is predicted that a record breaking crowd will be in attendance.

Catalogues will be mailed upon request.

Persons desiring information may address the Secretary of the Exposition, Geo. T. Barnes, 713 Bell Building, Montgomery, Ala.

CRIMSON CLOVER.

(Concluded.)

In order to get satisfactory results using as small an amount of inoculating soil as recommended in last week's article (200 to 500 pounds), it will be necessary to use it in such a way that each seed will come in contact with some of the inoculated soil. A very good way is to take a large tub, fill it half full of the soil, put in enough Crimson Clover seed to plant one acre (15 pounds), then add water till the tub is as full as you can stir the mixture, stir well, then add what dry inculating soil you have, putting all in your wagon body, and mix thoroughly, after which it may be sown broadcast on one acre and immediately harrowed to cover the seed. The spring tooth cultivator is a very satisfactory tool to use between the rows when sowing seed as above.

If you depend on using soil without mixing with the seed it will be best to use as much as one ton per acre.

Rye, oats, or wheat may be sown with Crimson clover, then if you fail to get a crop of clover from lack of inoculation, dry and hot weather immediately after sowing, or from any other cause, the grain will pay you for all the work and trouble, by furnishing grazing, keeping your land from washing during the winter, and giving you a green crop to plow under in the spring, or letting it mature and saving for the grain.

If the clover should succeed the grain will cause it to furnish more grazing, or more hay and be of very little disadvantage if you wish to turn it all to supply humus and plant food for succeeding crops.

Be sure and try at least a small patch this fall. We must begin to get ready for the boll weevil and learning to grow clovers will be a great help to us.

"F."

Good Roads Days, August 14th, 15th and 16th, is being talked about all over the state, since the reports have come in that over $50,000 people and forty-odd counties worked the roads on these days. The Alabama Good Roads Association is due a vote of thanks for inaugurating and pushing the movement, which has been so well received and observed. Good Roads Days should be made permanent and the people in every county in the state should observe same.

A. S. Jones, of the Lee Pharmacy, Chico, Cal., who has handled Foley & Co.'s medicines for many years, says: "I consider that Foley's Honey and Tar Compound has no equal, and is the one cough medicine I can recommend as containing no narcotics or other harmful properties." drift along in the same old happy go-lucky manner? Let each taxpayer answer that question for himself. It takes concerted action on the part of any community to arrive at the desired consummation. It needs every cent of money that is justly due the town of Clanton to carry on these improvements and absolute necessities. No increase in the tax rate is wanted—none is necessary; under the present rate enough cash can be raised to defray all expenses, pay moderate salaries to all Town officials, and then have sufficient left to continue the good work for the benefit of all the citizens and the glory of Clanton. But every man must do his part, little or much, and to commence with every taxpayer should—nay, must pay his taxes due to the town. The Union-Banner is credibly informed this is not being done.

At the last election a mayor and four Councilmen were duly elected, duly qualified and accepted office. The law provides, amongst their first duties they shall hold a meeting, levy a tax rate, appoint a collector and see that taxes are paid. And now the information comes that no proper meeting of the Mayor and Council has been held, a quorum not being present at any meeting, no tax levy has been assessed, and the affairs of the town are in bad shape generally. Some have paid their taxes for last year, some have not, and to our knowledge others have requested to be told the amount of their taxes and have been informed by the Clerk of the Town that his books were in another place and he would look into the matter, and there the matter stands. It is not an uncommon thing to hear a man say: "No, I have not paid my town taxes, so-and-so has not paid his, and there is no reason why I should pay and he escape." Among odher things we hear is that more than one of the taxpayers of the Town of Clanton have never yet contributed one cent to the taxes of the town since it became an incorporation. A deplorable state of affairs if true.

Recently, in April, 1912, to be exact, an expert accountant from Birmingnam came to Clanton to make a report on the books of the town. From that report we learn very little, although it is voluminous, covering some twenty-four pages of foolscap. One of the most interesting things it contains is that when he requested to see the previous report on the books of the town, made in 1910, it was nowhere to be found. Town Clerk J. E. Robinson, Jr., said it had never been in his possession; he went to former Town Clerk E. B. Deason for it, who stated that he had had the report and after reading it gave it to a member of the Town Council and did not know what had become of it. And apparently no one else knows what has become of it. A strange disappearance surely. What price the Town paid for that document we do not know, but it was a valuable document the property of the town and should have been carefully preserved for future reference.

Since the foregoing was written the Town Council has held a meeting and an election for Town officers is ordered to be held on Monday, September 16, 1912—the day of general municipal elections all over the State, and the following ticket has been put out:

For Mayor—J. E. Gowan.

For Councilmen—E. M. Pinckard, M. L. White, J. E. Robinson, Sr., J. C. Jones and P. I. Hopkins.

It is currently reported on the streets of Clanton this ticket is to have opposition, and in accordance with the spirit of the times a "Progressive" ticket is to be put in the field.

A SAFE SUBSTITUTE FOR CALOMEL.

A Mild Vegetable Medicine for the Liver That Is Free From the Dangers of the Powerful Chemical, Calomel.

The Upchurch Drug store has a mild vegetable remedy that successfully takes the place of the powerful mineral drug, calomel, the old-fashioned liver medicine. This remedy is Dodson's Liver-Tone, a very pleasant tasted liquid that gives quick but gentle relief from constipation without the bad after-effects which so often follow taking calomel.

Dodson's Liver-Tone is fully guaranteed to be a perfect substitute for calomel, and if you buy a bottle and it does not entirely satisfy you, The Upchurch Drug Store will promptly give you your money back upon request.

It is fine for both children and grown people.

SAGE AND SULPHUR

Made Her Look Twenty Years Younger

READ MRS. HERRICK'S SWORN STATEMENT

STATE OF NEW YORK } ss.: ROCHESTER, N. Y.
COUNTY OF MONROE }

Nancy A. Herrick, being duly sworn, deposes and says: When I was a girl I had a head of heavy, long, dark brown hair which was the envy of my friends and which attracted the attention and remarks of strangers, but as I grew older it commenced to come out. When my hair was quite thin and gray, I was induced by the many good reports I had heard of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to try a bottle; and you can imagine my satisfaction when I found my hair was fast coming back to its natural condition. I continued to use Sage and Sulphur until my hair was as heavy, dark and smooth as when I was a girl of sixteen. It is now four years since I began using Sage and Sulphur and my hair is in splendid condition.

The Raw Recruit.

F. M. King enlisted in the Spanish-American war and was sent to Jefferson barracks. He was strolling through the company streets smoking a cigar when an officer approached. King saluted.

"Look here," said the officer, "don't you know better than to salute an officer when you have a cigar in your mouth? How long have you been here?"

"Three days," replied King.

"You are excused this time," said the officer, "but don't let me catch you doing that again."

In a short time King met the same officer and walked by without saluting.

"Why didn't you salute?" demanded the officer, stopping him.

"Well, you just told me not to salute when I had a cigar in my mouth," replied the raw recruit.

But he spent three days in the kitchen peeling potatoes for this offense.—Atchison Champion.

NEED OF FRESH FOOD SHOWN

Scientific Name Given to Disease Which Afflicted Members of Polar Exploration Party.

In an address lately given before the Zoological Society of France, Dr. Jacques Liouville, the physician and naturalist who accompanied the Pourquoi-Pas on her antartic expedition, stated the chief physical troubles with which the crew had to contend were three in number, all, in his opinion, springing from the lack of fresh food. He therefore terms this polar malady "the disease of conserved food." The malady comprised symptoms of scurvy, polar anaemia and severe frost bites or chilblains, which frequently bled constantly. The underlying cause of all the affections is an alteration in the chemical composition of the blood—or "dyscrasia." The heart functioned badly, and the patients suffered from terrible shortness of breath, frequent drowsiness, and oedema of the lower extremeties. They were easily exhausted and unable to march, while the slightest movement brought on intense palpitation. However, all these morbid symptoms disappeared within ten days when fresh meat was obtainable, and did not appear again after the fresh wild celery obtained at Tierra del Fuego had been enjoyed for some time. Dr. Liouville took a just pride in the fact that this was the first polar expedition which ever restored all its members to their homes in a state of perfect health. He had three surgical cases to handle. Recovery was highly satisfactory, which he ascribes partly to the entire absence of pathogenic bacteria and partly to the fact that there was not a trace of alcoholism in the patients.—Scientific American.

The Hat Question in 1790.

The Handel festival was originally given in Westminster Abbey, and the official notice of 1790 announced that "no ladies will be admitted with hats, and they are particularly requested to come without feathers and very small hoops, if any." As ecclesiastical law demands that female worshippers shall cover their heads in church, this regulation was curiously anomalous. A suggestion in regard to ladies' headgear was also made by Sir Frederic Cowen in 1906, when he gave it as his opinion that the ladies might discover in their wardrobe some "extremely fascinating flat hats," which would not obstruct the view. The "fascinating flat hats" were, however, chiefly conspicuous by their absence, owing presumably (we write subject to feminine correction) to the fact that the flat hat was not among the fashions of that year.—London Globe.

Stool of Repentance.

For many years in front of the pulpit in Scottish churches persons under censure sat during the service. Afterward they stood to receive public rebuke. From this practice we derive the "stool of repentance."

Won't Have His Calling Insulted.

There is one sure way to insult a delicatessen storekeeper and turn the honey of his disposition into gall. It can be done by remarking carelessly as you buy his meat balls or fish cakes that you only want them for the cat, anyhow. No delicatessen man with an ounce of dignity can stand that.

"I lost a customer last week by refusing to sell a ring of liverwurst to a woman who was buying it for her dog," said one man in the trade. "She was a good customer, but when she decided that she guessed that ring of wurst would do because she only wanted it for the dog, I said: 'Madam, human beings might feel honored to eat that wurst; it is not for dogs,' and I put it back in the case.

"Meat balls composed of the very best beef, veal, eggs, and cracker crumbs are likewise insulted. They will do for the cat. If women must buy these delicacies for their pets, let them, but let them refrain from insulting the storekeeper by telling him so."

IMPARTING FRAGRANCE TO TEA

It is estimated that the Chinese consume annually five pounds of tea for each member of the population. It grows in small patches around the homesteads, plantations being practically unknown. The leaves are picked by members of the family and dried in the sun, being subsequently handed over to the middlemen, who subject them to the process of firing. In the case of green tea the leaves are roasted almost immediately after they are gathered, and dried off quickly after being rolled into balls by hand and squeezed. There are usually three pickings—early in April, when the leaves are covered with a whitish down (a limited output known as pekoe); toward the middle of May and again in August. Brick tea is made by pressing the damp tea in a mold in the form of a brick, 8 to 12 inches long and about one inch thick. The fragrance of all scented tea is not natural, but imparted by firing the leaf with a sort of jasmine flower, called by the Chinese "mok-lee." In inferior teas the scenting flower is strewn over the top of the tea when packed and removed after a day or two. Flowery pekoes are white, velvety tipped teas with no fragrance and are unfermented.

UNDER OBLIGATION TO NONE

Columbia Has Many Students Who Owe Their Education to Their Own Efforts.

One man in three meets at least a part of his expenses by his own earnings at Columbia. Beside the obvious occupations, like tutoring, stenography, newspaper, library, gymnasium, religious and social work of various kinds, there is a man who makes his living dressing windows; another who practices osteopathy, another man who divides his time between college work and the management of a theatrical star; a teacher in the Fe'er school, a taxidermist, an expert in color photography, a vaudeville performer, a hospital orderly, a Pullman porter, a printer, technical assistants from three of the great city laboratories, a professional baseball player and a tree doctor.

One of the most popular undergraduates started life as a newsboy. Last winter a sophomore of eighteen was tempted away from the college by the offer of a $2,000 position in a publishing house, where he had worked before coming to Columbia. One student spends his summers upon a Central American plantation; another adds not only to his own income but to the reputation of the university by contributions to the most dignified of American reviews.—Columbia Monthly.

Premature Burial.

M. Thoinot, professor of forensic medicine to the Paris Academie de Medicine, has been lecturing upon premature burial, an accident the fear of which is, perhaps, not so prevalent as it was in the days of Edgar Poe. He gave an interesting description of the many inventions devised for the avoidance of this, including the insertion of a breathing tube in the mouth of the corpse, which is brought through the lid of the coffin and projected from the grave. But he declared that no precaution was so satisfactory as that of delaying the burial until the signs of putrefaction are apparent. The provisions of the code Napoleon, which ordain that no burial shall take place until twenty-four hours after death and inspection by the medical authority of the district, are, he said, entirely adequate on this point, and if they are carried out to the full, no one need have any fear of being buried alive.

Homesickness Spoils Photographs.

Aunt Maria thought, and so did her relatives in the big city, that the photographer was unpardonably discourteous. For three successive days he refused to take Aunt Maria's photograph. On the fourth day he told why.

"In justice to her," he said, "I do not want to take her pictures now. She is too homesick. Most out-of-town people want to be photographed while in the city. If they are longing for home I put them off with one excuse or another until the homesickness wears off.

"If you want your aunt's pictures to turn out well, just hunt up some one from her home town who happens to be visiting here at present and bring him here so she will meet him unexpectedly. The meeting will put sparkle and animation into her face, and neither she nor I will be disappointed with the photographs."

Finding the Drowned.

Occasionally one reads that, when human bodies are thought to be in rivers and cannot be found, "a loaf of bread has been floated down the stream." But very few people have the least idea what connection there is between bread and the finding of bodies. When the river has been dragged without result, a loaf of bread is cut in two, a place hollowed out in the middle, and a quantity of quicksilver inserted. The two halves of the loaf are then fastened together again, and the bread is thrown into the water in the place where the body is supposed to be. Without fail the loaf floats along until it reaches the vicinity of the body, and then revolves quickly, hovering over the spot.

ALWAYS MASTER OF FINANCE

How John D. Rockefeller Established His Credit in the Early Days of His Career.

Just because John D. Rockefeller has made more money than he can count without the aid of nineteen clerks and forty adding machines, not to mention a well trained corps of coupon clippers, there are many people who come forward these days with stories to show that John, now famous for his wealth, wigs and wit, was once about the cutest person that ever happened when it came to financial strategy.

According to this latest narrative, Rockefeller told a close friend—and that "close" goes both ways—one morning that he wanted to borrow $5,000 and that he must have it in order to save his business. The friend went down town in the course of his work, and pretty soon met a big banker.

"I wish," said the banker, "if you see Mr. Rockefeller this afternoon, you would tell him that I have found a place to put that $10,000 which he asked me to loan out for him."

The friend gasped like a goldfish, and proceeded on his way, encountering another of the town's leading bankers.

"By the way," said the banker, "when you see Rockefeller this afternoon, please tell him that I have found a man who wants to borrow that $10,000."

The friend staggered on, and met a third banker, who repeated what the other two captains of finance had said. Then he went back and found Rockefeller.

"John," he said, in astonishment, "when I left you this morning you told me you had to borrow $5,000, and all day bankers have been telling me that you asked them to lend out $10,000 for you."

"Well! well!" smiled Rockefeller, "that's fine! I suppose I may safely assume now that my credit is established in this town. I'll just step out and borrow that $5,000 I need."—Popular Magazine.

OLD STRUCTURES IN DECAY

Condition of Famous Leaning Towers in Italy Excite Apprehension of Antiquarians.

Reports have been current for some time concerning the safety of the Leaning Tower of Pisa, and the Italian papers announce a similar state of things with the Garisenda of Bologna and the Ghirlandina of Modena. The former dates from 1110, and the latter from 1224 to 1319. The Tower of Pisa, which is about 177 feet in height, is 14 feet 6 inches beyond the perpendicular. It is accentuated from the base, but diminishes half way up and onward. The inclination is said to be greater today than it was in 1817. This has been marked in later years. But there are other disquieting signs. Some of the stonework of the windows is giving way, and the steps are said be cracking. The soil upon which Pisa's Tower was raised, a Paris contemporary points out, is "permeable and friable," and subsoil water is believed to be penetrating beyond the masonry. Architects and other experts are now engaged in a close observation. They fear that below the foundations there are some considerable voids, and they are of opinion that the inclination of the tower has increased since 1859. The commission appointed to deal with the matter concludes that there is no immediate danger, yet there must be no delay in remedying matters. The Garisenda is about 161 feet feet in height, with an inclination of just 14 feet. The Ghirlandina is said to be the highest of the towers, being 331 feet. It is slightly inclined toward the Cathedral, which itself is in a feeble state.

When We Meet Our Kind.

"Attendants in European museums look to it that no American may escape meeting his compatriots," a traveler said. "At Mme. Tussard's wax works exhibition the custodian let me wander around alone for an hour, puzzling helplessly over British royalty, but when I got in the neighborhood of Harry Thaw he woke up. How he discovered then that I was an American I do not know; I hadn't said anything. But I coughed, and perhaps that betrayed me. Anyhow, 'That's Harry Thaw,' said he.

"I thanked him and passed on. At my heels came the guide. He followed me to the staircase. 'Crippen's down stairs,' he said. Three steps further along he hailed me again. 'And Guiteau,' he announced.

"The trio of my fellow countrymen excited no thrill of patriotic pride, but the custodian had done his part."

Why We Have No Paris.

There can never be in the United States a real Paris of America until we shall get ranks and orders of nobility, and that will only be when our republic shall develop into a grand imperial nation. Under a newly acquired emperor a titled class would follow as a matter of course, and the easiest way to get it would be to sell the titles. Ten million dollars would buy a dukedom, $5,000,000 the title of count, and $1,000,000 that of baron. In the beginning of old world nobility titles were granted by the sovereign for eminent services, but when such a system is started in a great country like ours the simplest way would be to establish an aristocracy of wealth.

Until then our great metropolitan cities will never be more than mere centers of business and capital.—New Orleans Picayune.

ROUGH MANNERS OF THE PAST

Drinking Trick in Which English Monarch Figured—The First Fingerless Gloves.

Drinking tricks figured in diplomacy in the time of Henry VIII. Mrs. Henry Cust quotes the king's challenge to Hubertus, the representative of the Palsgrave Frederick. He sent for two huge goblets, filled with wine and beer respectively, and gave the envoy his choice for a "drinking out" test. In vain Hubertus pleaded that his master had actually instituted a company of the Golden Ring to put down such contests, any member who broke the prohibition to lose his ring and give $1 to the poor. Henry, anxious to prove that the Englishman was the better man, promised to find the forfeits himself and drank his beer at a draft, while it took the German four gulps to account for the wine.

How early did mankind think of the convenience of the fingerless glove? Little was said of gloves in ancient times, but in most cases it is obvious that they had fingers. Those worn by the secretary of the younger Pliny, used when he visited Vesuvius, so that he might keep on jotting down notes in spite of the cold, must have been fingered, no less than those of the glutton in Anthenaeus, who wore gloves at table so that he might handle the meat while hot and get in advance of his bare handed fellow diners.

Of all "aptitudes," the mechanical is least likely to manifest itself in a feminine brain. The young woman whose visit to a locomotive works is described in Young's Magazine, was doubtless interested in what she saw, but her account of the processes observed leaves the reader to doubt her entire understanding of them.

"You pour," she told a friend, "a lot of sand into a lot of boxes, and you throw old stove lids and things into a furnace, and then you turn the red-hot stream into a hole in the sand, and everybody yells and shouts.

"Then you pour it out, let it cool and pound it, and then you put in it a thing that bores holes in it. Then you screw it together, and paint it, and put steam in it, and it goes splendidly, and they take it to a drafting-room and make a blue-print of it.

"But one thing I forgot—They have to make a boiler. One man gets inside and one gets outside, and they pound frightfully, and then they tie it to the other thing, and you ought to see it go!"—Youth's Companion.

CHORUS GIRLS WANTED EGGS

Incessant Demand Caused Irritated Chef to Come Forward With Indignant Protest.

The hauling of a theatrical company was in charge of Agent Lindsey, says the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times-Star. He contracted to take complete charge of a good-sized operatic company for three days, furnishing sleeper and meals en route. The contract was a good one, and Mr. Lindsey determined to make the occasion memorable. "I will set the best table you can find in the state," said he to the theatrical agent. "I will guarantee there will not be a single complaint."

So he bought all the steaks and chops and lobsters and shell fish and all that sort of thing that he could find in the market and planted them in an ice box and hired a relay of chefs and undertook to feed those chorus ladies out of slenderness. There were forty persons in the company. At the first luncheon thirty-six of them ordered eggs.

"Got to ohder moah aigs by wire, Mr. Lindsey,' reported the chef. "These heah chorus girls certainly do have the aig habit."

For dinner that night thirty-eight of the company ordered eggs in some style. The chef wired ahead for more eggs. At breakfast the next morning the entire company of forty wanted eggs, and not one of them wanted those eggs as any other one wanted them. At luncheon thirty-two demanded more eggs. That night the first pair to reach the diner asked for eggs. The chef walked right in and made the speech: "Nevah mine ohderin' no moah aigs," said he. "They ain't no moah aigs. You-all must think we cahhies a hen on this car."

"Mother's" Name.

A deed was being drawn for a certain farmer to sign. All went smoothly until the lawyer asked him his wife's name.

"Oh, yes, of course. My wife's name. Very necessary, to be sure," said the farmer.

It was plain to be seen that he was not prepared to answer. The blood rushed to his face, he looked troubled, and finally turned his back and looked out of the window.

"What do you think of that!" he exclaimed, as he turned slowly round. "I simply cannot remember her name. You see, they used to call her Pet when she was a girl at home, and that was her name with me until two years after our marriage, when I began calling her 'mother.' I could not tell you her name if it were a capital offense not to do so. S'pose it wouldn't do to call her Pet in the deed?"

It would not do, so he hurried away, and in an hour came back with his wife's full name written on a slip of paper.—Youth's Companion.

New York's Seal.

The figures on the seal of the city of New York refer to the trades in which the early settlers engaged. The beavers were used as early as 1645, for the trade in beaver skins was an important industry from the colony's beginning. In 1686 the flour trade had become important also, so the windmills and barrels were added to typify that occupation.

Whole Hog or None.

"Whole hog or none" refers to the alleged custom of Mahomet to allow his followers to eat all except one portion of a pig, which portion, however, was not specified. The result therefore was that if a Mahometan did not wholly avoid the use of pork he might as well run the risk of consuming the whole hog as to eat any portion thereof.

"Were all medicines as meritorious as Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy the world would be much better off and the percentage of suffering greatly decreased," writes Lindsay Scott, of Temple, Ind. For sale by Alred Drug Co.

The Mystery of Fishing.

Fishing is more full of mystery than a dime novel. For instance, here are a few questions about it that the wisest fisherman on earth can not answer:

When two men, using the same sort of bait, tackle, etc., fish in just the same way, side by side, from the same boat, why will one of them sometimes make a good catch, while the other catches nothing? Why will a certain bait prove irresistible to the fish one day and be scorned by them on another day that is just like the first? Why do fish seem ravenously hungry one minute and lie sulkily and motionless on the bottom the next minute? Why will there be hundreds of one sort of fish in a certain locality one day and why will they all be replaced by a totally different fish the next day? There are a hundred other unanswerable fish questions. But most unanswerable of all is the question why they are so easily caught by one man while another and perhaps more expert fisherman, sitting close beside the lucky fisher, won't get so much as a bite?

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

When Portugal Was Great.

The announcement that Portugal is to be linked up by "wireless" with "all the Portuguese colonies" is a reminder of the vanished greatness of what was once the leading colonizing empire in the world. From Lisbon in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries went out marines through the unknown and uncharted oceans to Africa, India and the New World to the west, and planted the flag of Portugal in every corner of the globe. But in Africa alone has Portugal maintained its hold of colonies of any magnitude. In India are little bits of Portuguese territory, Nova Goa, southeast of Bombay, being the capital of all Portuguese colonies east of Cape of Good Hope; while as far east as China the island of Macao, in the Canton river, first colonized nearly 400 years ago, still owns the sovereignty of the government at Lisbon.

DEATH OF MRS. BOOCKHOLDT

To the weary death comes as a relief, and the passing away on Tuesday of Mrs. Boockholdt, daughter of Mr. Wm. Boyd, was a blessed relief to one who had been an invalid for some time. She was thirty-seven years of age, an excellent Christian woman, a member of the M. E. Church, and a devoted wife and mother. The husband, two children, besides her father and sisters and brothers deeply mourn the loss of their departed one, and the sympathy of their friends is extended to them. She was laid to rest in the Clanton cemetery on Wednesday.

COPYRIGHT 1911, THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

The scene at the opening of the story is laid in the library of an old worn-out southern plantation, known as the Barony. The place is to be sold, and its history and that of the owners, the Quintards, is the subject of discussion by Jonathan Crenshaw, a business man, a stranger known as Bladen, and Bob Yancy, a farmer, when Hannibal Wayne Hazard, a mysterious child of the old southern family, makes his appearance. Yancy tells how he adopted the boy. Nathaniel Ferris buys the Barony, but the Quintards deny any knowledge of the boy. Yancy to keep Hannibal. Captain Murrell, a friend of the Quintards, appears and asks questions about the Barony. Trouble at Scratch Hill, when Hannibal is kidnaped by Dave Blount, Captain Murrell's agent. Yancy overtakes Blount, gives him a thrashing and secures the boy. Yancy appears before Squire Balaam, and is discharged with costs for the plaintiff. Betty Malroy, a friend of the Ferrisses, has an encounter with Captain Murrell, who forces his attentions on her, and is rescued by Bruce Carrington. Betty sets out for her Tennessee home. Carrington takes the same stage. Yancy and Hannibal disappear, with Murrell on their trail. Hannibal arrives at the home of Judge Slocum Price. The Judge recognizes in the boy a grandson of an old time friend. Murrell arrives at Judge's home. Cavendish family on raft rescue Yancy, who is apparently dead. Price breaks jail. Betty and Carrington arrive at Belle Plain. Hannibal's rifle discloses some startling things to the judge. Hannibal and Betty meet again. Murrell arrives in Belle Plain. Is playing for big stakes. Yancy awakes from long dreamless sleep on board the raft. Judge Price makes startling discoveries in looking up land titles. Charley Norton, a young planter, who assists the judge, is mysteriously assaulted. Norton informs Carrington that Betty has promised to marry him. Norton is mysteriously shot. More light on Murrell's plot. He plans uprising of negroes. Judge Price, with Hannibal, visits Betty, and she keeps the boy as a companion. In a stroll Betty takes with Hannibal they meet Bess Hicks, daughter of the overseer, who warns Betty of danger and counsels her to leave Belle Plain at once. Betty, terrified, acts on Bess' advice, and on their way their carriage is stopped by Slosson, the tavern keeper, and a confederate, and Betty and Hannibal are made prisoners. The pair are taken to Hicks' cabin, in an almost inaccessible spot, and there Murrell visits Betty and reveals his part in the plot and his object. Betty spurns his proffered love and the interview is ended by the arrival of Ware, terrified at possible outcome of the crime. Judge Price, hearing of the abduction, plans action. The Judge takes charge of the situation, and search for the missing ones in instituted. Carrington visits the judge and allies are discovered. Judge Price visits Colonel Fentress, where he meets Yancy and Cavendish. Becoming enraged, Price dashes a glass of whisky into the colonel's face and a duel is arranged.

CHAPTER XXV. (Continued.)

"Hues!" cried Murrell in astonishment, for the man confronting him was the Clan's messenger who should have been speeding across the state.

"Toss up your hands, Murrell," said Hues quietly.

One of the other men spoke.

"You are under arrest!"

"Arrest!"

"You are wanted for nigger-stealing," said the man. Still Murrell did not seem to comprehend. He looked at Hues in dull wonder.

"What are you doing here?" he asked.

"Waiting to arrest you—ain't that plain?" said Hues, with a grim smile.

The outlaw's hands dropped at his side, limp and helpless. With some idea that he might attempt to draw a weapon one of the men took hold of him, but Murrell was nerveless to his touch; his face had gone a ghastly white and was streaked with the markings of terror.

"Well, by thunder!" cried the man in utter amazement.

Murrell looked into Hues' face.

"You—you—" and the words thickened on his tongue, becoming an inarticulate murmur.

"It's all up, John," said Hues.

"No," said Murrell, recovering himself. "You may as well turn me loose—you can't arrest me!"

"I've done it," answered Hues. "I've been on your track for six months."

"How about this fellow?" asked the man whose pistol still covered Ware. Hues glanced toward the planter and shook his head.

"Where are you going to take me?" asked Murrell quickly. Again Hues laughed.

"You'll find that out in plenty of time, and then your friends can pass the word around if they like; now you'll come with me."

Ware neither moved nor spoke as Hues and his prisoner passed back along the path, Hues with his hand on Murrell's shoulder, and one of his companions close at his heels, while the third man led off the outlaw's horse.

Presently the distant clatter of hoofs was borne to Ware's ears—only that; the miracle of courage and daring he had half expected had not happened. Murrell, for all his wild boasting, was like other men, like himself. His bloodshot eyes slid around in their sockets. There across the sunlit stretch of water was Betty—the thought of her brought him to quick choking terrors. The whole fabric of crime by which he had been benefited in the past or had expected to profit in the future seemed toppling in upon him, but his mind clutched one important fact. Hues, if he knew of Betty's disappearance, did not connect Murrell with it. Ware sucked in comfort between his twitching lips. Stealing niggers! No one would believe that he, a planter, had a hand in that, and for a brief instant he considered signaling Bess to return. Slosson must be told of Murrell's arrest; but he was sick with apprehension, some trap might have been prepared for him, he could not know; and the impulse to act forsook him.

He smote his hands together in a hopeless, beaten gesture. And Murrell had gone weak—with his own eyes he had seen it—Murrell—whom he believed without fear! He felt that he had been grievously betrayed in his trust and a hot rage poured through him. At last he climbed into the saddle and, swaying like a drunken man, galloped off.

When he reached the river road he paused and scanned its dusty surface. Hues and his party had turned south when they issued from the wood path. No doubt Murrell was being taken to Memphis. Ware laughed harshly. The outlaw would be free before another dawn broke.

He had halted near where Jim had turned his team the previous night after Betty and Hannibal had left the carriage; the marks of the wheels were as plainly distinguishable as the more recent trail left by the four men, and as he grasped the significance of that wide half circle his sense of injury overwhelmed him again. He hoped to live to see Murrell hanged!

He was so completely lost in his bitter reflections that he had been unaware of a mounted man who was coming toward him at a swift gallop, but now he heard the steady pounding of hoofs and, startled by the sound, looked up. A moment later the horseman drew rein at his side.

"Ware!" he cried.

"How are you, Carrington?" said the planter.

"You are wanted at Belle Plain," began Carrington, and seemed to hesitate.

"Yes—yes, I am going there at once—now—" stammered Ware, and gathered up his reins with a shaking hand.

"You've heard, I take it?" said Carrington slowly.

"Yes," answered Ware, in a hoarse whisper. "My God, Carrington, I'm heart sick; she has been like a daughter to me—I—" he fell silent, mopping his face.

"I think I understand your feeling," said Carrington, giving him a level glance.

"Then you'll excuse me," and the planter clapped spurs to his horse. Once he looked back over his shoulder; he saw that Carrington had not moved from the spot where they had met.

At Belle Plain, Ware found his neighbors in possession of the place. They greeted him quietly and spoke in subdued tones of their sympathy.

When he could he shut himself in his room. He had experienced a day of maddening anxiety; he had not slept at all the previous night; in mind and body he was worn out; and now he was plunged into the thick of this sensation. He must keep control of himself.

He sought to forecast the happenings of the next few hours. Murrell's friends would break jail for him, that was a foregone conclusion; but the insurrection he had planned was at an end. Hues had dealt its death blow. Moreover, though the law might be impotent to deal with Murrell, he could not hope to escape the vengeance of the powerful class he had plotted to destroy; he would have to quit the country. Ware gloated in this idea of craven flight. Thank God, he had seen the last of him!

But, as always, his thoughts came back to Betty. Slosson would wait at Hicks' place for the man Murrell had promised him, and, failing the messenger, for the signal fire, but there would be neither; and Slosson would be left to determine his own course of action. Ware felt certain that he would wait through the night, but as sure as the morning broke, if no word had reached him, he would send one of his men across the bayou, who must learn of Murrell's arrest, escape, flight—for in Ware's mind these three events were indissolubly associated. The planter's teeth knocked together. He was having a terrible acquaintance with fear, its very depths had swallowed him up; it was a black pit in which he sank from horror to horror. He had lost all faith in the Clan which had terrorized half a dozen states, which had robbed and murdered with apparent immunity, which had marketed its hundreds of stolen slaves. He had utterly collapsed at the first blow dealt the organization, but he was still seeing Murrell, pallid and shaken.

A step sounded in the hall and an instant later Hicks entered the room without the formality of knocking. Ware recognized his presence with a glance of indifference, but did not speak. Hicks slouched to his employer's side and handed him a note which proved to be from Fentress. Ware read and tossed it aside.

"If he wants to see me why don't he come here?" he growled.

"I reckon that old fellow they call Judge Price has sprung something sudden on the colonel," said Hicks. "He was out here the first thing this morning; you'd have thought he owned Belle Plain. There was a couple of strangers with him, and he had me in and fired questions at me for half an hour; then he hiked off up to The Oaks."

"Murrell's been arrested," said Ware in a dull level voice. Hicks gave him a glance of unmixed astonishment.

"No!"

"Yes, by God!"

"Who'd risk it?"

"Risk it? Man, he almost fainted dead away—a damned coward. Hell!"

"How do you know this?" asked Hicks, appalled.

"I was with him when he was taken—it was Hues—the man he trusted more than any other!" Ware gave the overseer a ghastly grin and was silent, but in that silence he heard the drumming of his own heart. He went on: "I tell you, to save himself, John Murrell will implicate the rest of us; we've got to get him free, and then, by hell—we ought to knock him in the head; he isn't fit to live!"

"The jail ain't built that'll hold him!" muttered Hicks.

"Of course, he can't be held," agreed Ware. "And he'll never be brought to trial; no lawyer will dare appear against him, no jury will dare to find him guilty; but there's Hues, what about him?" He paused. The two men looked at each other for a long moment.

"Where did they carry the captain?"

"I don't know."

"It looks like the Clan was in a hell-fired hole—but, shucks! What will be easier than to fix Hues?—and while they're fixing folks they'd better not overlook that old fellow Price. He's got some notion about Fentress and the boy." Mr. Hicks did not consider it necessary to explain that he was himself largely responsible for this.

"How do you know that?" demanded Ware.

"He as good as said so." Hicks looked uneasily at the planter. He knew himself to be compromised. The stranger named Cavendish had forced an admission from him that Murrell would not condone if it came to his knowledge. He had also acquired a very proper and wholesome fear of Judge Slocum Price. He stepped close to Ware's side. "What'll come of the girl, Tom? Can you figure that out?" he questioned, sinking his voice almost to a whisper. But Ware was incapable of speech, again his terrors completely overwhelmed him. "I reckon you'll have to find another overseer. I'm going to strike out for Texas," said Hicks.

Ware's eyes met his for an instant. He had thought of flight, too; was still thinking of it, but greed was as much a part of his nature as fear; Belle Plain was a prize not to be lightly cast aside, and it was almost his. He lurched across the room to the window. If he were going to act, the sooner he did so the better, and gain a respite from his fears. The road down the coast slid away before his heavy eyes; he marked each turn, then a palsy of fear shook him, his heart beat against his ribs, and he stood gnawing his lips while he gazed up at the sun.

"Do you get what I say, Tom? I am going to quit these parts," said Hicks. Ware turned slowly from the window.

"All right, Hicks. You mean you want me to settle with you, is that it?" he asked.

"Yes, I'm going to leave while I can; maybe I can't later on," said Hicks stolidly. He added: "I am going to start down the coast as soon as it turns dark, and before it's day again I'll have put the good miles between me and these parts."

"You're going down the coast?" and Ware was again conscious of the quickened beating of his heart. Hicks nodded. "See you don't meet up with John Murrell," said Ware.

"I'll take that chance. It seems a heap better to me than staying here."

Ware looked from the window. The shadows were lengthening across the lawn.

"Better start now, Hicks," he advised.

"I'll wait until it turns dark."

"You'll need a horse."

"I was going to help myself to one. This ain't no time to stand on ceremony," said Hicks shortly.

"Slosson shouldn't be left in the lurch like this—or your brother's folks—"

"They'll have to figure it out for themselves, same as me," rejoined Hicks.

"You can stop there as you go by."

"No," said Hicks. "I never did believe in this damn foolishness about the girl, and I won't go near George's—"

"I don't ask you to go there; you can give them the signal from the head of the bayou. All I want is for you to stop and light a fire on the shore. They'll know what that means. I'll give you a horse and fifty dollars for the job."

Hicks' eyes sparkled, but he only said:

"Make it twice that and maybe we can deal."

Racked and tortured, Ware hesitated; but the sun was slipping into the west; his windows blazed with the hot light.

"Nonsense! If she was driving him to drink things would be different; she's trying to drive him the other way."

Too Much Renunciation.

"How foolish you women are," said Mr. Nagg to his better half. "You don't catch men doing such things as joining 'Don't Worry' clubs."

"Of course not," snapped Mrs. Nagg. "Men couldn't give up the pleasure of worrying their wives."

No Concern.

"Mr. Mips must be a singularly pure and upright man."

"Why do you think it is unusually so?"

"Somebody told him there were well-defined reports that a Burns detective had been operating secretly in the neighborhood he frequents, and he said it was nothing to him."

Opening Up Lhasa.

Lhasa, which is the capital of Tibet, for generations was known as the Forbidden City, because of its political and religious exclusiveness. In 1904 a British armed expedition opened the mysterious old city. Previous to that time practically every European traveler had been stopped in his efforts to reach the place. The population in Lhassa is about 35,000.

The Cannibals Need Food.

An officer of the French colonial army brought a letter from the chief of a group of missionaries in the southern islands of the Pacific not long ago, which winds up as follows: "I regret to tell you that our little company can do little against the fanaticism of these poor wretches. Moreover, famine is ravaging the country, for the harvest has been destroyed. Therefore the dispatch of more missionaries has become urgent."—La Petite Republique.

THE WAY OUT
Change of Food Brought Success and Happiness.

An ambitious but delicate girl, after failing to go through school on account of nervousness and hysteria, found in Grape-Nuts the only thing that seemed to build her up and furnish her the peace of health.

"From infancy," she says, "I have not been strong. Being ambitious to learn at any cost I finally got to the High School, but soon had to abandon my studies on account of nervous prostration and hysteria.

"My food did not agree with me, I grew thin and despondent. I could not enjoy the simplest social affair for I suffered constantly from nervousness in spite of all sorts of medicines.

"This wretched condition continued until I was twenty-five, when I became interested in the letters of those who had cases like mine and who were getting well by eating Grape-Nuts.

"I had little faith but procured a box and after the first dish I experienced a peculiar satisfied feeling that I had never gained from any ordinary food. I slept and rested better that night and in a few days began to grow stronger.

"I had a new feeling and peace and restfulness. In a few weeks, to my great joy, the headaches and nervousness left me and life became bright and hopeful. I resumed my studies and later taught ten months with ease—of course using Grape-Nuts every day. It is now four years since I began to use Grape-Nuts, I am the mistress of a happy home, and the old weakness has never returned." Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A lazy man gets up that way, goes to bed that way, and starts the year that way.

A thing that ought to be knocked in the head—thinking you can get money or honor or love without earning it.

Contentment on the farm should be cultivated and the farmer's aspirations circumscribed by his achievements in agriculture.

URGE FARMERS TO ORGANIZE

President of Illinois Bankers' Association Tells of Needs of Modern Agriculturist.

The following is an excerpt from an address by B. F. Harris, president of the Illinois Bankers' association:

In this country we hear the protests of the consumer and of the farmer, due to the pressure of organized finance and commerce, which would be largely reduced if agriculture was as well organized. Protest against big business is idle; we can only regulate and control it.

Such control, with equally effective organization on the part of farmers, will re-establish the balance between the various factions and economic factors of this country necessary to maintain our preeminence.

In Europe, for instance, they developed combinations first in the country for the general good, while we have first developed combinations in the city, not always for the general good. They have helped themselves by helping the farmer farm, while we have been more disposed to farm the farmer and many of his city cousins.

Good roads are an economic necessity and there is no occasion to labor the argument. The roads are an index of the character of any community, determining its importance and limiting or aiding its advance, and a country that isn't worth a good road isn't worth what it sells for, and soon won't be worth living in. A few progressive states alone are giving upward of $200,000,000 state road aid.

The "recall" to the farm is what we want, not simply back to the farm, but back up the farm; for the real slogan should be, "Forward to the farm," and make our rural pride at least equal our civic pride. The farm is the best place God ever planned in which to live a broad, free, helpful, efficient, serviceable and honorable human life. Representative progressive leadership, abreast of the times, is property expected and will soon be demanded of every executive, and the good citizen and banker must help bring this to pass. Effort and money spent in this cause will be the most marvelous earning asset of a magnificent future, not in dollars only, but in a contented, successful people—constituting an industrial and agricultural republic, peaceful and prosperous beyond compare and in political repose.

Grass Experiment in South.

Southern states need grass as well as corn and alfalfa and the department of agriculture is conducting some grass experiments in South Carolina, with 100 farmers helping. One ton of lime per acre is used, and a mixture of 200 pounds of fine bone and 200 pounds acid phosphate per acre.

This usual fertilizer appears to work well on soils well supplied with potash. They use a combination of orchard grass, tall meadow oat grass and Italian rye grass—with red clover. This promises to yield two and one half-tons or more per acre, and such a yield will greatly encourage the dairy and live stock industry.

SELL DIRECT TO CONSUMER

Farmer Will Come Into His Own When He Learns to Avoid Commission Merchants and Middlemen.

When the farmer learns to sell his products direct to the consumer and avoid commission merchants and middlemen, then he will come into his own.

The profits made by middlemen nearly in every case exceed 100 per cent; this added to what the farmer actually gets, would give him a fair return for the products of the farm.

A load of peaches sold at a commission house the past summer for 20 cents a basket, was taken to the retail market by the driver of the team (the peaches were never unloaded) and unloaded at the purchaser's stall, writes Royal O. Claget in the Successful Farming. The writer priced the peaches while they were being unloaded from the wagon and had quite a nervous shock when the dealer said 75 cents. A profit of 275 per cent.

The story of the farmer who sold a dressed hog to a meat dealer and afterward wanted to buy the hams and shoulders back and found that he would be several dollars out, is nothing in comparison with the profits made by the middlemen on fruits and vegetables.

During the past summer the writer sold peaches at 15 cents a basket. Wondering at the very low price, he priced the same peaches through a friend and found to his surprise that they were selling at 15 cents for one-quarter peck, a profit of 500 per cent.

This is not only true of peaches, but of all fruits and vegetables raised on the farm. The following table gives wholesale and retail prices and profits made by middlemen:

Apples—Wholesale price, 75 cents barrel; retail price, 5 cents quarter peck; profit, $1.65.

Cantaloupes—Wholesale price, 10 cents basket; retail price, 30 cents basket; profit, 20 cents.

Peaches—Wholesale price, 15 cents basket; retail price, 15 cents quarter peck; profit, 75 cents.

Onions—Wholesale price, 65 cents bushel; retail price, 10 cents ¼ peck; profit, 95 cents.

Damsons—Wholesale price, 50 cents basket; retail price, $1.00 peck; profit, $1.00.

Crab Apples—Wholesale price, 30 cents basket; retail price, 10 cents ¼ peck; profit, 40 cents.

Kelfer Pears—Wholesale price, 10 cents basket; retail price, 5 cents ¼ peck; profit, 20 cents.

Yellow Tomatoes—Wholesale price, 15 cents basket; retail price, 5 cents ¼ peck; profit, 15 cents.

The wholesale prices in the list were taken from the wholesale market and commission houses. The retail prices were taken from the retail markets, and nearly in every case upon the same goods.

Many farmers are now awakening to the fact that they are being "done" by the middlemen and are establishing routes in the cities, selling direct to the consumer and obtaining the highest prices possible. This is not only an advantage to the farmer but is more satisfactory to the consumer, obtaining their fruits and vegetables, as well as poultry, eggs and butter, in the freshest possible condition.

When eggs were selling at 25 cents a dozen wholesale, farmers selling direct to consumers were getting 40 cents a dozen. This is not only true of eggs, increases of the same proportion over wholesale prices were made on all of the products of the farm.

Another important point to be considered is to have all products of the farm put up in the cleanest and most attractive way. Fruits and vegetables put up in clean and attractive packages, bring from 25 to 50 per cent over those which are packed in an inferior way.

Then again, when selling through commission merchants you have to take it for granted that they are honest. When it comes down to a matter of dollars and doughnuts you have to be very particular with whom you are dealing.

Good Investment.

Every dollar spent in buying needed equipment for the farm is an investment that the farmer should be glad to make. It is the duty of every farmer to keep posted upon new implements and whenever one is found that saves labor and brings returns, buy it for his farm. A man progressive enough to look for needed equipment seldom finds any difficulty in finding cash to buy it.

Raise Chickens.

By all means raise chickens. Two or three hundred with plenty of range can be raised to advantage at very small expense because anything needed for feed can be raised on the farm. Corn and wheat make a fine chicken feed and for winter cabbages will add to the value of the ration.

BLUEJAY LIVES IN WOODS

Hawks, Owls and Other Birds Are Teased and Tormented by These Noisy Birds.

The bluejay likes best to live in thick woods, but it often comes into open fields, orchards and near dwellings in search of food. When it discovers you it assumes a proud and angry air of conceit and defiance.

The bluejay's upper parts are purplish-blue. The lower parts are purplish-gray. The wings and tail are bright blue with black bars. The tail feathers are tipped with white. It has a crested head.

The bluejay builds its nest about twenty feet above ground. It is made of twigs and fine roots. From four to six eggs are laid. They are of a greenish drab color flecked with brown.

Doubtless the bluejay helped to name itself, as its common utterance is a long drawn, "jay, jay, jay." This cry, with the bright blue color, has given it its name.

While the jay sings no song it is able to imitate the calls of other birds, by which means it often attracts them. It likes to tease and torment the owl and especially the little sparrow hawk. This is done by imitating the cry of a wounded bird, which draws the hawk near. Then several jays will dart at the hawk squealing and frolicking about in great glee. Sometimes the play ends in a tragedy, for the hawk pounces upon one of them, to the dismay of the others. Jays may be caged and tamed like crows and some writers say they can be taught to utter words. —"Bird Studies," by Herman C. De Groat.

Everybody In Hard Luck.

Suddenly he stepped up to a gentleman, who was waiting for the tram, and, tapping him lightly on the shoulder, said: "Excuse me, but did you drop a five-pound note?" at the same time holding out in his hand the article.

The gentleman quetioned gazed a moment at the note, assumed an anxious look, made a hasty search of his pockets, and said: "Why, so I did, and I hadn't missed it," holding out an eager hand.

The elderly hunter took the name and address of the loser and, putting the note in his pocket, turned away.

"Well," said the other, "do you want it all as a reward?"

"Oh, I did not find one," remarked the benevolent one with another beam; "but it struck me that in a big place like London there must be a quantity of money lost, and upon inquiry I found that you are the one hundred and thirty-first man who lost a five-pound note this morning."—London Answers.

"That couldn't happen here," returned Mike calmly.

"Why not?"

"'Cause there's only you and me," was the reply."—Everybody's Magazine.

HANDS ITCHED AND BURNED

Warrenton, Va.—"My little girl was troubled with eczema for three years. Her hands burned and itched and looked as if they were scalded. She could not sleep at night; I had to be up all night to keep her hands in warm water. She rubbed her hands and large white blisters came full of yellow water. Then sores came and yellow corruption formed. She could not take hold of anything with her hands. I used an ointment and tried a treatment, but nothing did her any good, so I got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. After bathing her hands with the Cuticura Soap and applying the Cuticura Ointment I was astonished to see the great relief, and Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment cured her hands in three weeks." (Signed) Mrs. John W. Wines, Mar. 8, 1912.

A Word to the Wise.

The proverbial advice, "Cobbler, stick to your last," had an apposite exemplification in the following anecdote, for which Zion's Advocate is responsible:

A colored man was brought before a police judge, charged with stealing chickens. He pleaded guilty, and received sentence, when the judge asked how it was managed to lift those chickens right under the window of their owner's house when there was a dog in the yard.

"Hit wouldn't be of no use, judge," said the culprit, "to try to 'splain dis thing to you all. Ef you was to try it, like as not you would git yer hide full o' shot, an' git no chickens, neither. Ef you want to engage in any rascality, judge, yo' bettah stick to de bench, whar yo' am familiar."

Orphanages in Turkey.

There are 22 orphanages in the Turkish empire, conducted by Americans, enrolling 3,000 inmates. In connection with these orphanages an industrial work has sprung up which gives employment to over 10,000 people in addition to the orphans. The work is largely done by the widows and orphans and includes rug and lace-making, various forms of embroidery, and other domestic work. The product of these institutions finds a market abroad.

Diplomacy.

"Mrs. Jinks always has such a good time when she goes anywhere. How does she manage to convey the impression she is a widow?"

"She always makes an allusion to her tardy husband, as 'my late husband.'"

Remarkable Financiering.

"Figures don't lie."

"Don't they? Here's an item from New York that says a policeman there saved $80,000 a month from his salary of $2,800. Those figures must lie, for they won't stand."

As a summer tonic there is no medicine that quite compares with OXIDINE. It not only builds up the system, but taken regularly, prevents Malaria. Regular or Tasteless formula at Druggists.

MAST TREES FOR THE CROWN

Mark of the Broad Arrow Was Placed on Pines in Plymouth Colony.

In the provincial charter of 1691, under which the Plymouth colony and the province of Maine were united with Massachusetts, it was provided that all trees of the diameter of 24 inches and upward at 12 inches from the ground, growing upon land not heretofore granted to any private person, should be reserved to the crown for the furnishing of masts for the royal navy. Harper's Weekly observes.

A surveyor general of woods was appointed to se that this provision of the charter was carried into effect. Near the coast all white pines of suitable dimensions were marked with the "broad arrow"—three cuts through the bark with an ax, like the track of a crow. This was the king's mark.

Long after the revolution had obliterated the royal authority men who had been taught in boyhood to respect the king's mark hesitated to cut such trees.

In felling a tree it was necessary to "bed it" to prevent its breaking. This was done by cutting the small growth and placing small trees across the hollow, so that there should be no strain upon one section more than upon another when the monster pine struck ground.

The mast was hauled out of the woods on one strong sled, whether in winter or summer, and so many oxen were required that the hind pair were often choked in crossing a hollow, being hung up in their yoke by the pulling of those ahead of them.

A mast hauling was a great event, and everybody within walking distance came to see it.

Barber Shops in China.

Since the Chinese revolution a great many Chinese have had their queues cut off, and this had led to the opening of a large number of barber shops throughout the far east wherever Chinese are located, says an exchange. Several progressive business men of Singapore, anticipating this, imported a large number of American barber chairs, and they are now unable to get supplies quickly enough. It has also been learned that the Chinese insist on having American hair clippers, and refuse all other makes offered them.

It would seem that American manufacturers of barbers' supplies should experience a large increase in their Oriental trade.

CRITICAL TIME OF WOMAN'S LIFE

From 40 to 50 Years of Age How It May Be Passed in Safety.

Odd, Va.:—"I am enjoying better health than I have for 20 years, and I believe I can safely say now that I am a well woman. I was reared on a farm and had all kinds of heavy work to do which caused the troubles that came on me later. For five years during the Change of Life I was not able to lift a pail of water. I had hemorrhages which would last for weeks and I was not able to sit up in bed. I suffered a great deal with my back and was so nervous I could scarcely sleep at night, and I did not do any housework for three years.

THE AUCTION WEDDING.

One of the small papers published an item this week which was a weird mixup of an account of a wedding and an auction notice. The most interesting part of the item follows:

William Smith, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Smith, and Mrs. Lucy Anderson were disposed of at public auction at my farm, one mile east in the presence of seventy-five guests, including two mules and twelve head of cattle.

"Rev. Jackson tied the nuptial knot for the parties, averaging 1,250 pounds on the hoof. The beautiful home of the bride was decorated with one sulky rake, one feed grinder, and two sets of work harness, nearly new, and just before the ceremony was pronounced Mendel & Sons' wedding march was rendered by one milch cow, five years old, one Jersey cow and one sheep, who carrying a bunch of bridal roses in her hand, was very beautiful. She wore one light spring wagon, two bushels of apples, three racks of hay and about 100 bushels of corn. The happy bridal couple left yesterday on an extended trip. Terms spot cash.

RESERVE FOR THE EMPEROR

Fish of Remarkable Delicacy Had Place Only on the Tables of the Highest.

Now that China is a republic it would be interesting to know what has become of the sacred fish which in the days of the empire could be eaten only by the emperor of China and his folk and the emperor of Russia and his folk.

This fish is an exquisite delicacy so delicious and rare that it has been reserved for royal palates from time immemorial. The fishermen whose duty it was to take it from the only stream in which it has been known to exist—a small river lying between Russian and Chinese domains—have had orders to let none of it be diverted from its noble destiny. Whether the fishermen themselves ever yielded to what one can imagine as an overmastering passion and indulged in a secret midnight repast of the glorious little fish of course none can say. But certain it is that the ordinary Chinaman would have turned shudderingly away from a banquet in which the prohibited fish was an item, no matter how his mouth watered for the dainty.

One of the things which makes the fish such a rarity is that it breeds only one at a time, a very extraordinary condition among fishes.

The Chinese—the nobles, at least—have been a nation of epicures, and there are no greater delicacies to be found anywhere than those which appeared on the tables of the emperor and his courtiers.

A large amount of ill health is due to faulty digestion. When the stomach fails to perform its functions properly the whole system becomes deranged. A few doses of Chamberlain's Tablets is all you need. They will strengthen your digestion, invigorate your liver, and regulate your bowels, entirely doing away with that miserable feeling due to faulty digestion. Try it. Many others have been permanently cured—why not you? For sale by Alred Drug Co.

I H C Hay Press

The horse power presses have greater capacity than any other horse press of equal size. They are lighter draft and easier on the horses. The step-over is the lowest and narrowest made. They have an adjustable bale tension, which insures compact bales. They are equipped with a roller tucker to turn in all staggling ends, thus making each bale neat in appearance.

I H C motor presses consist of a bale chamber and an I H C engine mounted on substantial trucks. The bale chamber of the motor press corresponds in size to the bale chamber of the horse press—14 x 18 inches, 16 x 18 inches, and 17 x 22 inches. No time is lost in setting up the machine. It can be moved easily from place to place, backed to the stack or barn, and started to work at once. The engine does not need a man to watch it and there is no danger from sparks. You can operate a small thresher or corn shredder, saw wood, shell corn, grind feed, pump water, generate electricity, or run a cream separator.

"What the Traffic Will Bear"

It would be a violation of every sound business principle for a merchant, on opening his store, to adopt a policy of exacting from his patrons the highest possible margin of profit. He wouldn't have many customers very long.

It would be a violation of every sound farming principle for a planter, on clearing his land for cultivation, to adopt a policy of exacting from the soil each year a maximum yield without taking steps to conserve the fertility of the soil.

"What the traffic will bear," a phrase common in railroad circles, is directly applicable to these self-evident business and farming principles. It means simply at how LOW a rate of freight can a railroad afford to transport any given commodity from point of production to point of consumption to enable the grower, or manufacturer, or jobber, to profitably produce or trade in that particular commodity in competition with a similar commodity transported from any other point of production to point of consumption.

The object the railroad has in fixing the rate of freight as LOW as possible is identical with the object of the merchant in operating on a narrow margin of profit, or the farmer in conserving the fertility of the soil which yields him a crop.

A low freight rate will frequently create production and stimulate the movement, or transportation, of a commodity over the lines of the railroad along which it is grown, or manufactured, or traded in. Not until commodities are transported over its lines has a railroad an earning power; and not until a railroad has an earning power does it become a constructive, a stimulating, a wealth-creating factor in the interest of the territory through which it operates.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company long ago recognized that proposition as the base of the free and unfettered movement of all traffic and of all traffic interchange. The L. & N. has therefore exerted equal effort to build up the territory through which its lines operate as it exerted to develop and build up the L. & N. itself. The L. & N. realized that the prosperity of the territory was essential to the prosperity of the railroad; that the interests of the railroad and the interests of the territory were identical; that what benefits the one benefits the other, and that what injures the one injures the other.

If this were not so, how many industries would now be in existence in Alabama? And if these industries were not in existence in Alabama, how would it be possible for the Louisville & Nashville to afford adequate transportation facilities to the people of Alabama?

We invite fair consideration by the thoughtful people of Alabama of these and other questions bearing on the relations of the L. & N. to the people.

Progressive Party Fairly Launched

Of all the number of political gatherings ever held in Chilton county, many of which have been of a stormy nature, the convention held last Friday at the court house in Clanton for the formation of the Progressive Party will be memorable for the calm and quiet judicious manner of the deliberations. Some six hundred men met with a fixed determination to arrive at a fair conclusion and having decided upon their course of action to go earnestly and energetically to work to carry out their desires. There was no harangues, no appeals to prejudice, not one word of harsh language was used, nothing done to wound the susceptibilities of any one, but there was a quiet discussion of the political conditions of the day—more especially as they are affected by party alignments, and as they will be under the platform of the Progressive Party, the hope of the future.

There was a progressive spirit apparent, a spirit of tolerance for those of a different opinion, a spirit of fraternity, a spirit of brotherly love which invited men of all parties to join in harmony, ignoring past differences, and uniting in one cause for the benefit of the people and the advantage of the country.

At 10 o'clock a.m., the meeting was called to order by M. D. Foshee, Chairman of the Republican Executive Committee of Chilton County and on motion H. A. Harris was elected chairman, and S. M. Pate secretary.

A discussion was at once commenced on the advisability of joining with the Progressive Party of the nation and short speeches were made by Sam Pate, J. W. Saul, W. Y. Nix, Madison Popwell, C. L. Langston, S. J. Jones, J. Osmond Middleton, J. M. Mims, Moses Robinson, J. N. Dennis, L. H. Reynolds, W. T. Bean, W. C. Edler, J. D. Collins, W. T. Herrod and others, all in favor of the proposed movement. No dissenting voice was raised and it was unamiously agreed to at once form the Progressive Party of Chilton County and the motion was enthusiastically carried by the unanimous vote of the convention.

Judge A. P. Longshore, of Shelby, came forward and was introduced to the convention by Judge Reynolds. After a cordial welcome he commenced a speech, explaining the objects of the Progressive Party, warmly advocating its platform, and recommending the independent voters of Chilton County to stand steadfastly by the new party. At its conclusion he was warmly applauded.

Hon. R. J. Perryman, Chairman of the State Progressive Committee, was introduced to the Convention and made a few remarks in a pleasing manner which were appreciated by his audience, and the Convention proceeded to permanent organization.

On motion Hon. J. Osmond Middleton was elected chairman pro tem, and S. M. Pate secretary; afterwards the election was confirmed by vote of the convention and they were made the permanent officers.

It was moved and carried that the Chair appoint a committee of five to nominate the Executive Committee of the Progressive Party, and the following were duly appointed:

W. Y. Nix, J. W. Sorrell, L. H. Reynolds, J. H. Vinson and W. L. Popwell.

The committee adjourned and after deliberation made the following report.

We, your committee, recommend the following:

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Beat 1. W. T. House, Mat Vines.

Beat 2. C. L. Langston, W. E. Thomas.

Beat 3. Calvin Jones, A. B. Manning.

Beat 14. T. J. Hubbard, B. J. Glasscock.

Beat 15. G. A. Keen, W. J. Moates.

Beat 16. D. S. Robinson, W. E. Thomas, Jr.

J. Osmond Middleton was elected Chairman of the Executive Committee and J. P. VanDerveer, Jr., Secretary.

J. N. Dennis, Tax Assessor.

J. D. Collins, Tax Collector.

J. W. Littlejohn, Treasurer.

W. T. Bean, Superintendent of Education.

W. T. Herrod, Commissioner of 3rd District.

Moses Robinson, Commissioner of 4th District.

G. O. Foshee, Coroner.

Delegates to the District Convention, W. C. Edler, J. S. Jones, L. H. Reynolds, J. O. Middleton, D. H. Gentry.

Alternates, G. C. Nicholson, W. S. Clark, J. M. Grant, W. L. Popwell, G. B. Jones.

Moved and carried the following resolution be adopted, and also that it be published in the next issue of The Union and Banner.

We, the Progressive Party, which has this day been organized in this Chilton County, Alabama, invite every white man who endorses our principles to join with us in this movement for the liberties of the common people.

We have organized with Democrats, Republicans, and Socialists and we declare that all men will be on equal footing, that no man will be discriminated against because of past party affiliations.

The principles of the Progressive party as set forth at Chicago August 5th, 1912, are good enough and broad enough for every American citizen in these United States to stand on, in that they declare for the rule of the people. They say the people have the right to nominate as well as to elect officers, and say that if the officers whom they elect do not do their work faithfully and well that the people who elected them have the right to recall them. Who would say that if the people are competant to elect an officer that they are not competant to turn him off, or recall him?

Is there anything wrong with our system of goverment? Let's see, it is said that it is a problem with thousands of our people to know one week where the next weeks necessaries of life are to come from. The two old parties have been scrapping over the tariff for many years, and the only difference with them is, which crowd will be protected. They both know that they will have to have revenue to run the government, and therefore cannot get along without the tariff. Their false position has been exposed by the new party.

The South has for half a century had no influence in national affairs, we have not been voting our ideas, but voting only from fear and against the Republican party. Our state has flopped from one faction to the other but the people have paid the freight all the time. Taxes get higher and higher. The South has not been free since the civil war. In the last Democratic convention Alabama furnished a candidate, who, if he had lived north of the Mason and Dixon line would have had no opposition for the Democratic nomination. If the Democratic party is entitled to win this time Hon. Oscar W. Underwood made it possible, and yet the Democratic National Convention was in session over a week and Mr. Underwood never received a single vote north of the Mason and Dixon line. Do you think the South has been treated fairly in this matter? How long will we stand for such? The Progressive Party offers relief. We are a party of the people, for the people and by the people. Our nation was first formed for freedom. Do we have it in the present condition? We have a chance to align ourselves with a party which offers us relief—The Progressive Party, whose motto is "Pass Prosperity Along".

In Alabama our people are taxed to death, and it increases year by year. Tax gatherers are sent forth every year to every nook and corner of the State to tax blood money from the common people, when the corporations horde their millions and practically pay no tax. The Governor of our state has threatened to go into the different counties of the State and compell the Commissioners Courts to tax the people more than they are now paying. In our own county taxes increase yearly, new offices are created to pay for the purpose of giving some favorites political jobs. If it goes on the present way it will be a question whether or not a person can own property.

The Progressive Party now being organized is composed of people who want to progress, men who see alike, and men who are willing to lay down name for principle.

We believe that eighty per cent of the people of this county are in sympathy with the progressive movement, so let's get away from dead issues and move out; let's vote for the best interests of our country.

Moved and carried the following resolution be adopted.

Whereas, the people of Clanton and Chilton County were greatly disappointed by reason of the fact that Colonel Roosevelt failed to speak in Clanton when he passed through here in 1906.

And whereas, the people of Chilton County are intensely loyal to Colonel Roosevelt and his policies, therefor;e

Be it resolved, by the people of Chilton County, in mass convention assembled on this the thirtieth day of August, 1912, that Colonel Roosevelt be, and he is herhby cordially invited and earnestly requested to speak in Clanton when he comes to Alabama during the present campaign.

A resolution was unanimously passed endorsing The Union and Banner as the official organ of the Progressive Party.

At the conclusion of a most harmonious meeting the Convention adjourned sine die.

A DEFINITE PLATFORM.

The platform of the Progressive Party is to be commended for its definiteness. In that regard it is far superior to the platforms of either of the other parties. Very careful work was bestowed upon it by men of ability and conviction. Among these men were DeanKirchwey, of the Columbia University Law School, and Dean Williams Draper Lewis, of the Pennsylvania Law School, the latter being chairman. The finished platform was the result of great study and very wide co-operation, so that it comes much nearer the desideratum of being a thought-out expression of many minds than is usual in platforms, whether national or State. The planks for the most part are commendably brief and unequivocal. The Payne-Aldrich tariff is condemned, and immediate downward revision is demanded. A "strong federal administrative commission of high standing, which shall maintain permanent, active supervision over industrial corporations, "is demanded as a means of regulating trusts. The Aldrich currency plan is opposed in so far as it would place the currency in private hands. It is maintained that American coastwise trade should use the Panama Canal without paying tolls, and the railroad companies should not be allowed to use the canal. A graduated inheritance tax is commended, and the pending income-tax amendment is approved. Warfare is deplored as a barbaric survival, and peaceful remedies for international troubles are commended. The policy of building two battleships a year is endorsed until an international agreement for the limitation of naval forces can be secured. By far the most fundamental provision in the platform is the one which declares for woman suffrage. It reads as follows:

The Progressive party, believing that no people can justly claim to be a true democracy which denies political rights on account of sex, pledges itself to the task of securing equal suffrage to men and women alike.

It seems that there was no opposition at all to the adoption of this plan.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Review of Reviews for September.

ROOSEVELT MAY VISIT CLANTON

The Hon. Theodore Roosevelt started on a tour of the country on Monday, and on his return from California, via New Orleans, he will come over the L. & N., leaving Montgomery Saturday morning, September 28, his train being due at Clanton about ten o'clock.

Every effort will be made to get the honorable gentleman to make a brief stop at Clanton and address the people of Chilton County, and we learn there is great probability of his doing so.

Many of our readers will remember the hearty welcome Clanton gave to the distinguished gentleman in October, 1905, and his courteous appreciation of the same, and we are satisfied a still more hearty welcome will be offered him on the occasion of his visit in September, 1912.

From Clanton Banner Oct. 26. 1905.

President Roosevelt's brief visit to Clanton was a memorable occasion which will be long remembered by the 3000 persons in attendance. Clanton outdid itself in the preparations, and the lower end of town around the depot was gay with decorations. A pretty arch was erected, covered with red, white and blue bunting, and bearing the word "Welcome." A gay steamer stretched across the railroad tracks, and the storehouses were resplendent in flags.

But the prettiest sight of all was the school children, 131 in number, who dressed in white, with a tricolored sash each child carrying a flag, marched down to the depot under the direction of Profs. Sessions and Moore. The way they fell into line bespoke the careful drilling they had received and evoked the admiration of the old soldiers.

As the train slowed up Col. Collier presented President Roosevelt with a boquet, bearing a greetiug from the ladies of Clanton. The President, after shaking hands with Col. Collier and Judge Reynolds, as the train proceeded to Birmingham, said: "I can't tell you how much I appreciate this welcome. I thank you all."

The train moved on, the crowd dispersed, and the first visit of a President of the United States to Clanton becomes a matter of history.

CENTRAL ALABAMA FAIR.

As the time approaches for the Central Alabama Fair at Selma, the chances for its success grow brighter. Practically all the space in the big building has been taken, but arrangements will be made to take care of all the agricultural exhibits which may be offered, even if it is necessary to shut out some of the merchants displays. This Fair is operated as an agricultural and live stock show and all other features are side issues. Arrangements will be made to have all trains held until late in the evening and a rate of one fare plus twenty-five cents for the round trip has already been published by the railroads.

Special amusements costing an immense sum have been contracted for and the management promises that there will not be a dull minute during the Fair.

DEPUTY SHERIFF C. W. COX KILLED

On Friday morning last, about noon, a deplorable disagreement between neighbors terminated in the shooting of Deputy Sheriff Charlie W. Cox at his home at West Clanton by Ed Martin, who rented land from Cox and they were farming on halves. Recently Cox had Martin arrested on the cnarge of having stolen some corn and oats, but this difficulty was overcome, and later Martin forbade Cox from his premises.

At the Coroner's inquest held Saturday it transpired that the fodder on the place had been pulled, left in the field to dry, and Cox had gone there to carry his share home, when Martin forbade him to enter the lot, and as he proceeded there Martin seized his gun and fired upon him.

Mr. Cox was carried into Clanton and was put under treatment at Dr. Hopkins' infirmary, but shortly afterwards expired. A young widow and a step-daughter survive him.

Mr. Martin was arrested and placed in jail. A preliminary trial will be held Friday, September 6.

ALABAMA WILL BE A MILLION BEHIND

TREASURER PURIFOY DISCUSSES PRESENT CONDITION OF THE STATE'S FINANCES.

SOLONS FACE SITUATION

State Will Receive Practically No More Money Before End of November.

Montgomery.—No money in the state treasury is an old tale, and one with which Alabamians are familiar. But it is not generally known, according to estimates, that at the conclusion of the current year, Alabama, will be in the rear of its finances just $1,000,000.

Alabama at the present time owes a Birmingham bank $160,000 in actual cash borrowed, and the bank is paid in interest 4 per cent of the principal. In addition to this sum the same Birmingham bank is caring for state warrants amounting to $290,000.

"This amount will of necessity be greatly increased," stated Judge Purifoy, "for the state receives no money before the end of November, and then very little. For it must be remembered that the first money collected by county tax collectors goes to pay the fees of county tax assessors. It might be stated with truth that practically all of the money which comes to the state makes its appearance in the first two months of the calendar year, January and February.

"I would estimate," he continued, "that when the current year expires the state will have expended $1,000,000 in excess of its receipts."

The state treasurer is of the opinion that an extraordinary session of the legislature is necessary—provided the legislators proceed in a business like manner in facing the financial crisis which confronts the state.

"The appropriation bills," stated he, "which were passed during the last session should be repealed. Numerous offers created in that session might, with wisdom, be abolished. But there is no manner of reaching a conclusion as to what the legislature will do. During the last session I appeared before the committee on appropriations and told the members that even were no additional appropriations made the state would be compelled to borrow money by October of that year. The committee, however, proceeded to appropriate, and this fact, in addition to new salaried offices created has got Alabama in its present plight."

The law requires the state treasurer to make a detailed statement of financial conditions early in the fall, Judge Purifoy stated that he would complete this statement by September 30, and that in its introduction he would very freely discuss matters which he believes to be of the gravest importance.

"I served in the legisture 20 years ago," said he, "and at that time the annual expenses of the state amounted to no more than $1,000,000. Now, despite the fact that the revenue has increased marvelously, we are operating $1,000,000 in excess of our receipts."

MOUNTAIN CREEK WINS FIGHT.

L. & N. Denied Right to Remove Station 2,000 Feet Further.

Montgomery.—Efforts on the part of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company to remove the depot at Mountain Creek to a place 2,000 feet from its present site met with failure at the hands of the Alabama railroad commission, which denied the railroad's petition, and decreed that the station should remain at its present location. This was the most important case to come before the commission.

The chief object of the railroad corporation in wishing to remove the depot from Mountain Creek was for the purpose of discontinuing the use of one of the three passenger stations in that immediate territory. The railroad company claimed that the depots at Marbury, Mountain Creek and Verbena were too close together, and that two stations were sufficient for that territory. On the other hand the state resisted the efforts of the corporation to remove the depot from Mountain Creek particularly, in view of the fact that the Soldiers' Home is located at that place.

There was much opposition to the removal of the Mountain Creek depot, especially from the Daughters of the Confederacy, and much other pressure was brought to bear upon the commission to deny the railroad's petition.

New Bank Wants Charter.

Montgomery.—J. C. Bowie, Leon C. Jones, H. M. Hicks and J. H. Hicks are leaders in the organization of the Bank and Trust Company, of Talladega, which has applied to the State Department of Banking for a charter. The bank will be firmly established, according to the notice of organization, with $100,000 capital. Evidence of Talladega's progress is embodied in the plans of the bank, which will be the third of the city.

Mr. Funk is the Progressive candidate for governor of Illinois.

CANAL TOLLS GO TO HAGUE

GREAT BRITAIN HAS RENEWED PROTEST AGAINST THE MEASURE.

United States Is Informed That Great Britain Will Appeal Matter to The Hague.

Washington.—Great Britain has reaffirmed its protest against the Panama canal bill. In a note filed with the state department by A. Mitchell Innes, charge of the British embassy, it was stated that if a satisfactory agreement could not be reached Great Britain would appeal to The Hague tribunal for arbitration.

The note submitted says Great Britain will give careful consideration to both the bill and the message President Taft sent to congress relating to discrimination in favor of American coastwise shipping in the canal. If after due consideration it is found that no satisfactory agreement can be reached in the matter Great Britain declares that it will be necessary to appeal to arbitration.

Mr. Innes was instructed by his government to file the protest and he sent it to the state department. It stated merely that Great Britain still stands in her previously explained attitude in regard to the Panama bill. The tone of the note makes it appear that Great Britain believes it will be necessary to submit the question to arbitration.

Mr. Innes, who has been acting as charge of the embassy during the absence of Ambassador Bryce, came to Washington recently from the summer headquarters of the British embassy in Maine to remain during the discussion in congress of the bill

One state department official declared he did not believe Great Britain had a case to carry before The Hague tribunal.

Ottawa, Ont.—Speaking on the Panama canal question at a dinner to visiting British officers and legislators, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said he believed British, Canadian and American diplomacy would bring about an agreement satisfactory to all.

Pointing to the fact that for more than 100 years difference between Canad aand the United States had been settled without resort to arms, Sir Wilfrid declared that poor arbitration was better than the most successful war.

Detectives Guard Rockefeller Home.

New York.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in a statement regarding labor troubles on his father's estate at Tarrytown, made it known that private detectives had been called to delve into the situation. A detective, with a large force of deputies, has been guarding Mr. Rockefeller's 1,000-acre place for several weeks. About 200 men are employed on the estate, nearly all foreigners. Mr. Rockefeller discredited reports that it was a black hand warfare.

Commission Rule For New Orleans.

New Orleans.—A commission form of government, including the right of initiative and referendum, was adopted at the special election here by a vote of more than 10 to 1. The official returns were 23,900 for and 2,119 against. Both regular and reformers voted for the new system of government. At the general election in November a constitutional amendment will be voted upon, the carrying of which will mean that the right of recall will also be made a feature of the commission form of government.

General Booth is Buried.

London, England.—Funeral services of the founder of the Salvation Army, Gen. William Booth, took place at the Olympia. In accordance with traditions of the organization they were without pomp or symbols or mourning, but were carried out with a moving fervor and impressiveness. Thirty-four thousand persons participated in the functions. Nearly half of them were the coats and red jerseys or bonnets with the red ribbon so familiar on the streets of the cities of the world where the [illegible]

BLEASE WINS OUT IN GOVERNOR RACE

RETURNS GIVE PRESENT GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA MAJORITY.

TILLMAN IS RE-NOMINATED

The Vote in the Primary the Largest Ever Cast in the State of South Carolina.

Columbia, S. C.—With a vote of 138,314 recorded, South Carolina has cast the heaviest vote in its primary here.

Cole L. Blease, the incumbent, led for governor by a majority of 2,296 votes over his two opponents. This elects him on the face of the returns.

Complete returns from Anderson county give Blease a majority of 2,100 in that county.

The vote for governor, 138,314, compares with a vote of 106,000 two years ago.

For senator B. R. Tillman, incumbent, polled 61,700, against 31,176 for W. J. Talbert and 23,563 for N. B. Dial. This insures Tillman's re-election.

For attorney general, J. Fraser Lyon, with 51,142 votes, and T. H. Peeples, with 38,385, are the leading candidates, and will make a second race.

S. T. Carter has been nominated for state treasurer by 30,000 majority.

John G. Richards, Jr., incumbent, and James Cansler will probably have to make the race over for railroad commissioner.

J. Willard Ragsdale appears to have beaten Representative J. E. Ellerbe in the Sixth congressional district, having a majority of about fourteen hundred. All other congressmen are renominated.

The primary in Charleston was attended by much excitement and by frequent disorder at some of the polling precincts. Most of the excitement was due to bitter factional feeling displayed in the race for the office of county sheriff, the incumbent, Capt. E. J. Elmore Martin, winning by a majority of 1,890. Congressman G. S. Legare, who stood for re-election against H. Leon Larrissey, defeating Larissey by a large majority, was aligned with Sheriff Martin. Mayor John P. Grace was the chief supporter of A. W. Perry, Sheriff Martin's opponent, and the claim was freely made during the day by the Martin forces that the police were being used against them at the polls.

On requests from the Martin-Legare headquarters, officers of the militia companies of the city quietly mobilized their men at the armories and held them in readiness to turn out under arms should their presence be needed.

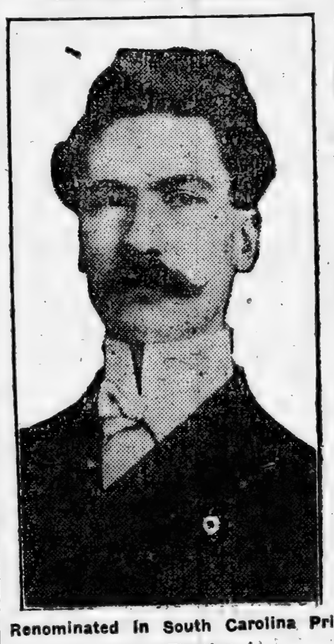
Milking Early, She Saved Family.

Logansport, Ind.—Because Mrs. William Bowyer was up early milking, while her husband slept, lives of the husband and two children were saved, bpt the industrious wife is bent in grief over the death of her 15-months-old baby. Mrs. Bowyer discovered fire in their home when near the barn attending to her regular work. Rushing into the burning structure she dragged the unconscious form of her husband and two of her children to safety. She was about to dash in to get the baby when the roof fell.

Officers Elude Mob.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The negro burglar and murderer of Collinsville, Ala., who has been pursued by an armed mob of several hundred men and bloodhounds, was landed in jail at Fort Payne. He was captured near Chesterfield across the Lookout mountain by J. W. Gavin and son. The mob was some distance behind when the capture was affected. So the negro was turned over to Sheriff Harris and he eluded the mob and took the prisoner to Fort Payne.

GOVERNOR BLEASE.



Renominated in South Carolina Primary Election.

MONEY FOR CENTENNIAL 1919.

Want Matter Included in the Call For Extra Session.

Montgomery.—Strong pressure will be brought to bear on Governor O'Neal to have the executive include in his call for an extra session of the legislature, if such session is called, legislation looking to an appropriation to aid the committee appointed by the governor from the state at large in organizing the Alabama Centennial exposition.

The governor has already given the project his hearty indorsement and has actively assisted in the promotion of the great exposition, which is to be held in 1919, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Alabama to the Union.

The committee from the state at large to perfect the preliminary plans is composed of the leading citizens of the state, every county being represented thereon. This committee will hold its first meeting in Montgomery or Birmingham during the month of October. Dr. Thomas M. Owen, director of the state department of archives and history, was appointed temporary chairman, and Paul Stevenson, a Montgomery newspaper man, who is a member of the committee, will act as temporary secretary.

The great exposition, which will be nation-wide in its scope, will be held in Montgomery, Birmingham or Mobile, and committees from the commercial bodies of those cities will cooperate with the committee from the state at large. At the first meeting of this committee it is planned to have addresses made by former Governor David R. Francis of Missouri, former United States Senator Jared Y. Sanders of Louisiana, who promoted the New Orleans-Panama exposition, and Governor Emmet O'Neal of Alabama.

The project has been heartily approved by Oscar W. Underwood, chairman of the ways and means committee; United States Senator Joseph F. Johnston, Congressman J. Tom Heflin, John L. Burnett and Hugh Dent, Governor O'Neal, Capt. Reuben F. Kolb and numerous other state and national officers.

As the working plans of the committee will not be completed until early in 1913 and as construction work on the great exposition should begin in 1917, it is seen that only five years remain in which to complete the gigantic task.

ACCOUNTS ARE CORRECT.

Examiners Report on State Technical Institute.

Montgomery.—Accounts and vouchers of Miss M. A. Glenn, treasurer of the Alabama Polytechnical institute at Auburn, have been examined and found correct by State Examiner G. F. Sedberry. The examination was made with special attention to the agricultural appropriation of $27,000, made by the last legislature, and the examiner's report to the governor shows that this fund was properly handled.

This $27,000 appropriation was made by the legislature for the purpose of aiding in experimental work, for the dissemination of valuable information relative to experiments of the boll weevil and other agricultural insects and for the investigation of scientific methods relative to the various farming interests of the state.

State Examiner W. F. Wilkinson has made his report to the governor of an examination of the accounts and vouchers of E. S. Lyman, treasurer of the Alabama Girls Technical institute of Montevallo, and he found them correct.

The report shows that the receipts for the year 1910-11 were $86,985.49 and disbursements totalled the same amount. For the year 1911-12 the receipts were $94,283.16, with disbursements the same.

O'Neal Invited to Salt Lake City.

Montgomery.—Governor O'Neal has been invited by Gov. William Spry of Utah to attend the twentieth annual session of the National Immigration congress, which meets at Salt Lake City, September 30 to October 3. Governor Spry has also asked that delegates be appointed to this congress.

Montgomery.—The beginning of the second year of the State Automobile department's operation finds its officials prepared to issue licenses to automobile owners. Tags and licenses came to the department, and, although the licenses are operative from October to October, they will be issued to applicants any time during the month of September, effective until October 1, 1913. The haste is made that the work of issuing thousands of licenses will be thus lightened by early applications. The law which provides for State registration of automobiles will be pushed more vigorously than during the first year of its operation, if such a thing is possible, it was stated.

124 Teachers Pass Recent "Exams."

Montgomery.—One hundred and twenty-four out of 190 students who attended the Summer University school succeeded in standing the recent state teachers' examination, according to announcement made by the state department of education. The list was complete save for two members of the summer school who applied for life certificates. No positive announcement was made concerning their application owing to delay in the furnishing of proof as to their eligibility.

ROLLA WELLS

Mayor Rolla Wells of St. Louis has been made treasurer of the Democratic campaign committee. He is president of the Business Men's League of St. Louis, and was Wilson's campaign manager in the middle west before the convention.

MANY WOMEN IN PARADE

WOMEN SPEAK FROM SOAP BOX IN OPENING CAMPAIGN FOR BALLOT IN OHIO.

Six Thousand Suffragettes Trudge Through the Streets of Columbus.

Columbus, Ohio. — Approximately six thousand women paraded the streets here advocating votes for women. Most of them trudged briskly over the long line of march under the hot sun, while others in automobiles, gaily decorated with emblems of equal suffrage, followed in a long procession.

The parade was the most spectacular event of the Columbus centennial. When the procession terminated, it at once disintegrated into a hundred or more crowds addressed by women on soap boxes. A feature of the parade had been the soap boxes carried by many of the marchers. When the march ended these boxes were distributed to every corner of the business section.

At Memorial hall 3,000 sympathizers gathered to listen to speeches. Dr. Anna Shaw and Fola LaFollette were among the speakers.

Among the elaborate floats participating were six chariots, sent here from Baltimore, each representing a woman's suffrage state.

Hundreds of men carrying yellow pennants and wearing yellow banners with "Votes For Women" stamped on them were in the line of march. Thousands lined the streets and cheered the women.

GIBSON ATTACKED BY CUBAN

American Charge d'Affaires Assaulted by a Reporter in Havana.

Havana, Cuba.—Hugh S. Gibson, the charge d'affaires of the American legation at Havana, while entering a hotel here, was assaulted by a Cuban newspaper reporter. Mr. Gibson was not seriously injured.

His assailant was arrested, and the Cuban secretary of state personally expressed his regret to the charge d'affaires at the occurrence.

Mr. Gibson was just entering the hotel at which he habitually dines when the man, without warning, sprang upon him from behind and knocked him down. When the American was lying on the ground his assailant jumped upon him. At this moment Edward Bell, the second secretary of the legation, reached the scene and dragged off the assailant.

Large Sum Added to Titanic Fund.

Gloucester, Mass.—The women's Titanic memorial fund was increased several thousand dollars here through the instrumentality of Mrs. John Hays Hammond and other society leaders by means of an outdoor dramatic performance

Speaker Clark Wrecked Desk.

Washington.—Repairmen examining the furniture of the house discovered that Speaker Clark, during the last nine months, had used his gavel with such effect that virtually the entire top of the desk was wrecked. One entire section had been pounded away, leaving a large hole, concealed by the green felt that covers the desk. The speaker throughout the session made vigorous use of the gavel on all occasions. No speaker since Thomas B. Reed has employed the mallet with such freedom.

Long Wins Rifle Championship.

Seagirt, N. J.—Corporal Cedric M. Long of the Fifth regiment of Massachusetts, is the champion military rifleman of the United States. He attained this honor at the annual rifle tournament here after two days of shooting, during which he surpassed the efforts of more than 100 other competitors, including all the crack shots in the military service of the United States, regular and National Guard. He scored 235 points against 231 for his nearest rival.

STATE BRIEFS.

Gadsden.—Experts report a vein of black marble in Calhoun county as inexhaustible.

Anniston.—The country commissioners are considering proposed raises in assessments in Calhoun county, both urban and rural property owners being on the grill.

Montgomery.—A voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed in the Federal District Court by H. M. Dickinson, of Macon County. His liabilities are listed at $1,107 with assets at $750.

Decatur.—Work will commence on the much talked of new depot for New Decatur, within the next ten days, according to a statement just given out by Superintendent T. E. Brooks of the Louisville and Nashville railroad.

Huntsville.—Frank Mokley, Granniston Hall, Tom Hungton and George Hudson will be compelled to work out fines, imposed for selling liquor contrary to law, in the coal mines.

Mobile.—At a meeting of the city commission a communication from U. S. Engineer C. F. Flagler, granting authority for the city to dredge in front of the new steel sheds, was read.

Gadsden.—Farmers in this section are somewhat alarmed by the report of cotton worms at Whitesville, six miles from Boaz. The farmers of that section are using much poison and hope to stop the spread of the pest.

Anniston.—That the action of Secretary of War H. L. Stimson in requesting the military committee of the senate to take no steps in regard to recommending or discussing establishments of permanent war maneouver grounds at Tullahoma, Tenn., was a decided victory for Anniston, is the opinion of Congressman Fred L. Blackmon.

Gadsden.—A sensation was sprung at council meeting when Dr. George S. Vann, president of the council, told that body that it has been reported to him that a gambling place has been conducted in the Commercial hotel on Chestnutt street and that one o fthe police evidently had knowledge of the fact.

Mobile.—Rumor from a reliable source is to the effect that a deal was consummated here whereby Joseph T. McGowin, a well know mill man of South Alabama, comes into possession of 122,000,000 feet of lumber through the purchase of the timber acreage of the estate of H. H. Wheless, who several weeks ago committed suicide in his room at a hotel in Shreveport, La.

Birmingham.—At a well attended meeting of the Cotton Seed Oil mill men of the state held at the Florence hotel many important matters were discussed not only of interest to the mill men of the state but of interest to the public as well. The meeting was an open one and presided over by Col. E. Lamar of Selma, 65 delegates representing every section of the state were present.

Mobile.—At the conclusion of an executive session of the Revenue and Road Commissioners. It was learned that that body has virtually decided to do all of the county highway improvement under the good roads bond issue voted by the people, the work to be under the direct supervision of the county engineer. It was held that under this method the county could save a large sum of money, which would otherwise go in profit to contractors.

Birmingham.—The school census of Jefferson county has been completed with the revised returns coming in from Ensley which add 200 children of school age to the report in the hands of Prof. I. W. McAdory, county superintendent of education. The figures show that there are 71,[illegible] children of school age in the county, an increase of nearly 6,000 over the census of 1911. Of this number there are 40,038 whites and 31,690 colored.

Talladega. — The commissioners court awarded the contract for the building of the model highway, which extends from Talladega towards the city of Sylacauga. The survey was completed some months ago.

Clio.—Congressman Henry D. Clayton delivered an address at the opening of the Barbour county high school. The people of Clio and Barbour county are very enthusiastic over the high school, and it bids fair to become one of the best institutions in this section of the State.

Birmingham.—Frank Hewitt, tax assessor for Jefferson county has completed the compilation of the property assessments of the county, which show a property valuation of $[illegible],000,000 or an increased valuation of over $3,500,000 over last year. The figures do not include the assessments made by the state tax commission owing to pending litigation.

Gadsden.—The chamber of commerce, recently organized, has [illegible] taken to build a county and city [illegible] at this place.

WOULD LAND FISH ALIVE

Philadelphia Dealer Departs on 14,000-Mile Fishing Trip to Prove the Theory.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The experiment of transporting fish alive 14,000 miles is to be tested by Thomas Keepfer, who left his home in this city on the Hamburg-American liner Kaiser Auguste Victoria for Siam via Hamburg. Mr. Keepfer believes that the fish can be brought from Siam and landed in this country without difficulty in large fresh-water tanks, notwithstanding the long distance which they have to be carried.

Mr. Keepfer believes that in a few years all edible fish will be sold alive, and that his experiment will bring about means by which scientists will enable dealers to sell fish alive at the door of every householder, and by this means eliminate a great deal of sickness from ptomaine poisoning.

Chinese fishing steamers, it is claimed, carry fish to their markets several hundred miles away with only a minimum loss.

Missed the Fly.

Chardon, O.—Norman Whiting was shaving himself when a fly settled on his face. Whiting made a quick move for the fly and cut off the end of his nose.

DIZZINESS—DO YOU HAVE IT?

This is caused by the bile being reabsorbed into the circulation. To get rid of this trouble it is necessary to use a good liver medicine to eliminate the surplus bile from the system. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator either liquid or powders does this to perfection. Use it for all bilious troubles and you will soon feel better. Accept no substitute, but insist on having the genuine St. Joseph's Liver Regulator. Druggists and dealers sell it liquid, 50 cents a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents a box, five boxes for a dollar.

GUESSER IS OUSTED

Government Employed Man to Estimate Fish Weight.

Discharge Expert Who Had to Tell on Sight Number of Pounds in Each Salmon Bought for Breeding.

Bangor, Me.—The official guesser for the United States government has lost his job. For years the government has bought live salmon upon the good eye of a veteran fisherman, who took a squint at each fish and then put down in his book what he guessed to be the right weight. The bills were paid accordingly—thousands of dollars.

Every year the government buys from 600 to 1,000 live salmon for breeding from the weir owners on the Bucksport, Verona, Orland and Penobscot shores. The price paid is the market rate, from 20 to 30 cents a pound, with 60 cents bonus for each fish for the trouble of keeping them alive.

To get at the exact weight of a live salmon is practically impossible, for it is very delicate work at best in dipping them from the "pound" in the weirs to the "car," which is an old dory filled with water, carefully lined with cotton flannel and covered with a netting, which is covered outside with canvas. The utmost caution is necessary, for in the spring the salmon is strangely delicate. So it is that weighing them is entirely out of the question.

The government has for years hired a veteran fisherman to make the rounds of the weirs on the little power boat and keep account of the fish. All the man had to go by was his judgment, but he could tell by a glance at a fish, even in the semi-darkness of the car, about what it would weigh—ten, twelve, fourteen or perhaps sixteen or eighteen pounds. It was guessing, but by years of experience in handling fish he could guess very near. At any rate, his guessing was accepted for years by the fishermen who sold the fish, as well as by the government.

Perhaps the government officials in Washington didn't approve of paying out money by guess. Whatever may have been the conclusion, the government guesser has lost his job. Hereafter twelve pounds will be the fixed weight of every salmon paid for. It may weigh eight pounds or it may weigh twenty pounds, but the fishermen are to be paid for a twelve pound fish and no more nor less. This weight is below the average, as the fish run, but, of course, the fisherman is not obliged to sell an eighteen or twenty pounder at the twelve-pound basis to the government unless he chooses. He can send it to the markets.

The government is buying 1,000 fish this year, which, at the twelve-pound standard, will cost from $3 to $3.50 a fish.

BANDIT'S GOLD IS FOUND

Workmen Remodeling Old Plantation Manor House Discover Hoard of Notorious Bank Robber.

Liberty, Mo.—Ten thousand dollars in gold, believed to have been hidden by William Anderson, a bandit who terrorized central Missouri immediately after the Civil war, has been found in the old manor house on what was the plantation of William Burch, in Howard county, Missouri.

The property is owned by C. E. Yancey of Liberty. Mr. Yancey was notified of the discovery by employes who are remodeling the old house.

According to those familiar with the story of the death of Anderson in 1868, he was wounded after robbing a central Missouri bank and stopped that night in the manor house of the Burch plantation, dying several days later. It was in the room in which the bandit slept that the money was found.

JUDGE LOSES HIS CLOTHES

Sl.: Lawyers and Kansas Jurist Pretend to Be Boys by the River With Sad Results.

Kansas City, Mo.—Seven lawyers from this city went to a fishing resort near here and thought they would spend the week end in the old-fashioned way. Their boy nature got the best of them, and they all went swimming—bathing suits barred. When they were ready to return to camp a suit of clothes belonging to Judge John C Pollock of the Kansas federal court was missing.

PLAN TO REFORM NEWPORT

Women of Resort Employ Detectives to Make "Survey" of Law Violations.

Newport, R. I.—Women identified with the millionaire's colony have had private detectives for several days making a "survey" of the city. It is said that the detectives will report on all varieties of violations of law here, including gambling, illegal liquor traffic and disorderly resorts. The report is to be sent to Governor Pothier.

SHAKO TO BE RESTORED

British War Office Revives Historic Old Headdress in the Service.

The war office has at last definitely decided to adopt the shako for the full dress headgear of infantry of the line in place of the heavy and clumsy helmet.

The pattern to be adopted differs slightly from that worn for so many years by our infantry and will be much lower in the crown, approximating more to the kepi of the French infantry.

The new headdress is extremely light to wear and will be of a uniform pattern throughout the service. It will be worn only by the infantry and the royal artillery. The royal engineers, the army service corps, the royal army medical corps and other branches of the service will continue to wear the helmet until the new pattern can be provided for them.

The white helmet is also to be retained for the Indian service, and for the present the khaki helmet for the colonial service is not to be discarded.

Some new shakes are already manufactured, and it is proposed to send a soldier wearing one of them to Buckingham palace in order that it may be examined by the king, who will have the opportunity of comparing it with the present pattern helmet.

Large numbers of the new shako are to be manufactured immediately, and it is hoped that the whole of the infantry at home may be equipped with them not later than the end of next year.

It will not be necessary to apply to parliament for a supplementary estimate for the issue of the shako, since the war office has funds in hand out of which the cost can be met.

No decision has been arrived at yet as to the troops which shall first receive the new headdress, but a beginning will probably be made with those at Aldershot, and not in Ireland, as has been announced.

It is proposed that only the royal regiments shall wear a plume with the shako, though of course the plumes worn by the Scottish regiments that now have this head dress will not be interfered with.—Pall Mall Gazette.

"NATURE" RESCUES WOMAN

Fire Destroys a House That Was Moved by Flood Into Canal Path.

Louisville.—That English poet who wrote "Nature never did betray the heart that loved her"—and Mrs. Ellen Clark—were vindicated when fire of mysterious origin destroyed the woman's house here recently.

Several years ago Mrs. Clark's cottage was floated off its lot and deposited squarely on the route through which the government subsequently decided to construct a canal. Then it came time, a few weeks ago, to tell her that she must move the house out of Uncle Sam's way, she replied: "Nature put it there; nature can remove it," and that was all they were able to get out of her until they paid her a cash consideration of $150 to sign jump-claim papers.

And now Mrs. Clark is pointing to the ashes and taunting the federal agents with "I told you so."

THAT ABODE OF THE PAST

John Galsworthy's Charming Picture of an Ol' Disused Southern Landmark.

"Yes, suh—here we are at that old time place!" And our dark driver drew up his little victoria gently, writes John Galsworthy in Scribner's.

Through the open doorway, into a dim cavern of ruined house, we passed. The mildew and dirt, the dark, denuded dankness of that old hostel, rotting down with damp and time!

And our guide, the tall, thin, gray haired dame, who came forward with such native ease, and moved before us, touching this fungused wall, that rusting stairway and telling, as it were, no one, in her soft, slow speech, things that any one could see—what a strange and fitting figure.

Before the smell of the deserted, oozing rooms, before that old creature leading us on and on, negligent of all our questions and talking to the air, as though we were not, we felt such discomfort that we soon made to go out again into such freshness as there was on that day of dismal heat. Then realizing, it seemed, that she was losing us, our guide turned; for the first time looking in our faces, she smiled, and said in her sweet, weak voice, like the sound from the strings of a spinnet long unplayed on: "Don' you wahnd to see the dome room, an' all the other rooms right here, of this old place?"

Again those words! We had not the hearts to disappoint her. And as we followed on and on, along the moldering corridors and rooms where the black peeling papers hung like stalactites, the dominance of our senses gradually dropped from us, and with our souls we saw its soul—the soul of this old time place; this mustering house of the old south, bereft of all but ghosts, and the gray pigeons niched in the rotting gallery round a narrow courtyard open to the sky.

"This is the dome room, suh and lady; right over the slave market it is. Here they did the business of the state—sure; see their face up there in the roof—Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson, Davis, Lee—there they are! All gone—now! Yes, suh!"

KEPT WARM BY ELECTRICITY

Ingenious Device Employed for Babies' Cribs in Presbyterian Hospital in New York.

In the Presbyterian hospital, New York, there is an interesting instance of the application of electricity in the nursery for the benefit of the incubator babies. Here, says the Edison Monthly the problem is to provide plenty of fresh air and at the same time sufficient warmth for the babies, and this has been solved by a simple but effective form of crib warmer.

The sides of the bassinet in which the baby lies are covered with asbestos boards and beneath is an electric heater or foot warmer, with cable couplings and switch which allows the current to be regulated. In a warm-air chamber between the bassinet and the foot-warmer is a partition, so constructed with reference to the baby's position in the crib that the heat is reflected to the lower end of the bassinet. The child's feet are thus kept warm, while a lower temperature is maintained at the head.

Beauty and Utility.

For the seventeenth time in three years the microscopic South American state has undergone a change of administration, and the new potentate, President Casper, the three hundred and second, had summoned an artist, and was ordering new designs for all the official uniforms.

"I want something striking," he declared—"something showy, even. My people are impressed by such things. I have here some sketches I made myself. Look them over, and be guided by these ideas as far as possible."

The artist examined them carefully.

They were gorgeous affairs. Green coats vied with crimson vests in brilliancy, orange-colored trousers with scarfs of Cambridge blue. All the colors of the rainbow were there.

"Ah!" he said, turning the pages. "This is evidently for the navy, this for the army, this for—this—what is this for, with the long plume on the three-cornered hat, the bright yellow dress, trimmed with purple and—"

"That," explained the president, bravely, "is for the secret police!"

Refuse to Wear Skirts.

Mombasa, East Africa.—The local Portuguese governor of Inhambane has been forced to rescind his recent order that the native women of that section wear skirts. The edict aroused tremendous opposition among the women of the surrounding country, who bring eggs and vegetables into the village for sale. They declared their intention of boycotting the town unless the governor should withdraw the decree.

Woman Finally Recovers From Nervous Breakdown

Impoverished nerves destroy many people before their time. Often before a sufferer realizes what the trouble is, he is on the verge of a complete nervous breakdown. It is of the utmost importance to keep your nervous system in good condition, as the nerves are the source of all bodily power. Mrs. Anna Kounz, 211 Mechanic St., Pueblo, Colo., says:

"For many years I suffered from nervous prostration; I was unable to do any house work and doctors failed to help me. Remedies I tried from druggists did not do me a particle of good. A neighbor told my husband about and he procured a bottle. After the first few doses I showed a marked improvement and after taking two bottles I was entirely cured. I have been perfectly well for years and cannot praise Dr. Miles' Nervine too highly."

If you are troubled with loss of appetite, poor digestion, weakness, inability to sleep; if you are in a general run down condition and unable to bear your part of the daily grind of life, you need something to strengthen your nerves. You may not realize what is the matter with you, but that is no reason why you should delay treatment.

has proven its value in nervous disorders for thirty years, and merits a trial, no matter how many other remedies have failed to help you.

Sold by all druggists. If first bottle fails to benefit your money is returned. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

TRIUMPH OF GERMAN CHEMIST

Dr. Von Bolton Has Succeeded in Making Diamonds From Illuminating Gas.

Dr. W. Von Bolton has been trying to grow diamonds. At a recent congress of the German Bunsen society he described the decomposition of illuminating gas under the action of sodium amalgam, which precipitated the carbon in the form of black coal and, it seemed, of diamonds, but these were in too small quantity to permit of analysis. Dr. Bolton determined to obtain a greater quantity by making diamonds grow on some mother substance.

The Scientific American says he placed 50 grams of 14 per cent. sodium amalgam in a long testing tube, and coated the upper layer with a diluted water-glass solution, over which he spread amorphous diamond powder. The tube was kept at a temperature of 100 degrees centigrade in a water bath, after which a slow current of moistened illuminating gas was introduced. The amalgam was allowed to give off its mercury vapor for one month, when very little black carbon had been separated, but on the layer covered with diamond powder many particles of high brilliancy were found.

The contents of the tube were boiled in a platinum crucible with a mixture of fluoric and sulphuric acids. The microscope revealed that the amorphous powder had been converted into brilliant crystals, true diamonds, still too small, however, to allow of analysis.

New Use of the Banana.

"There are now in Jamaica six factories manufacturing banana figs, chips, meal and flour," said James McC. Harris of Boston, who recently returned from Jamaica. "During the seasons at which the fruit is cheapest all of these plants are run at their maximum capacity. The methods of drying the fruit are different in different plants, though all resort, I believe, to a hot air process. It takes about 400 to 500 pounds of the fruit to manufacture 100 pounds of meal.

"The banana fig is as palatable as the natural fig and resembles it closely in color. It has replaced the natural fig in many markets in which it has been introduced. The chips are sold primarily for breakfast foods, being made into a porridge. Several of the manufacturers, who deal in the European markets, ship the chips to their mills in those European cities and have it ground into meal there. Grist mills, the same kind used for manufacturing meal from corn, are used."

When you have an achey, stretchy feeling and you are dull, tired and discouraged it is a sign of approaching malaria or chills. You should act quickly to ward off an attack. SINGING CONVENTION.

The Chilton County Singing Convention No. 3 met at Lomax Church on August 31st, and September 1st, 1912.

Saturday. The body was called to order by President Jackson. Prayer by Mr. Powell, of Shelby. A committee on program composed of the Secretary, A. A. Jackson, J. H. Scott and T. C. Jackson was then appointed. Later J. R. Scott and W. Q. Sanders were added to the committee. Directors for the forenoon were President Jackson, J. H Davis, T. C. Jackson, J. H. Scott and A. A. Jackson of Birmingham.

First held a business, the following officers were elected, for President T. J. Jackson, for Vice President W. F. Armstrong, for Secretary Z. J. Jones, for Assistant Secretary J. H. Scott, amended the By-Laws as follows: That any member to be elligible to office in this convention must be a moral person and hold membership in the convention one year previous to their election. Appointed a committee as follows to revise the list of members: J. R. Scott, W. Q. Sanders and J. H. Davis. Received from Shelby convention Mr. Powell. Heard reports from Jackson's Chapel, Bethel and Waldrup's School House, recent music schools were reported from the two last named places, all reports indicated a healthy interest in sacred song. Appointed a permanent reception committee composed of J. A. Blankenship and T. C. Jackson. Directors for the afternoon were J. A. Blankenship, M. V. Lawley, Vice President Armstrong, J. H. Williams and J. H. Willioughby.

Second day, Sunday morning 9 o'clock, called to order by the President. Prayer by Rev. H. J. Guy. Directors for the forenoon were President Jackson, J. A. Blankenship, Vice President Armstrong, M. V. Lawley, Miss Ida Scott and A. M. Johnson and F. Thomas of Montgomery. Then held a memorial service as follows: In memory of Prof. B. F. White, directed by T. C. Jackson, assisted by J. H. and J. R. Scott, Misses Henry Lee Sanders and Ethel Jackson, of Prof. Walker, directed by Vice President Armstrong, assisted by M. V. Lawley, John Hayes, Misses Ida Scott and Iris Teel, of Prof. King, directed by J. A. Blankenship, assisted by President Jackson, A. E. Teel, Misses Bertha Jackson and Ursula Jones, of Mrs. Albert Patterson, a deceased member, directed by J. H. Willioughby, assisted by A. D. Scott and A. A. Jackson. Afternoon, agreed to hold the next session of the convention at Cedar Grove Church near Thorsby on the 1st Sunday in May and Saturday before, 1913. Directors for the afternoon were A. E. Teel, Mr. Hurst of Montgomery; J. H. Scott, A. D. Scott and John Hayes. Closing songs by the President. Benediction by Rev. H. J. Guy. The convention was a fine success, from every view point.

T. J. JACKSON, President.
Z. J. JONES, Secretary.

MAPLE SPRINGS

Editor Union-Banner—Things are still lovely down here. Few have been on the sick list but all are improving glad to say. Some have began picking cotton, and all will soon. Some of our young folks visited Lomax Sunday and some say there was nothing doing; some have been all smiles ever since going, so we'll leave this for your consideration.

We think most of the girls of this community are thinking of moving to Verbena soon. Now, I think there should be a cake cutting beforehand, think they should take this in consideration and do the right thing. and we know what that would be (give us cake).

There is to be singing at this place on the third Sunday morning at nine o'clock. Books to be used will be New Syrics of Praise. Come and bring your books.

News are scarce, guess I had better ring off and come again soon, hoping to hear from each community next week, and especially from "Uncle Pete."

I am still, BLUE JAY.

Mrs. J. N. Hill, Homer, Ga., has used Foley's Honey and Tar Compound for years, and says she always recommends it to her friends. "It never fails to cure our coughs and colds and prevents croup. We have five children and always give them Foley's Honey and Tar Compound for a cold, and they are all soon well. We would not be without it in our house." Upchurch Drug Co.

THORSBY.

Next Sunday morning Captain Leonard of Birmingham, will sing at the Congregational Church, in the evening she will have charge of the service. Captain Leonard is a very sweet singer and one of the best workers in Birmingham among the Salvation Army. Every one is requested to attend the services and hear something nice.

Last Sunday a few of the Thorsby people went out to Pates Chapel to Sunday School. The people there are having a fine Sunday School and making improvements right along. Next Sunday they expect to have their new Cornish Organ.

Our public school opens next Monday morning.

Mr. Alfred Ryder and family leave this week for their new home in Montgomery.

Quite a number of students are expected next week to enter the high school.

Quite a few people around town are feeling the effects of the hot weather.

The Thorsby Fruit and Truck Growers' Association held its third annual picnic Saturday, August 31st on the Thorsby Institute grounds. Different games were played by the children in the forenoon and after a couple of hours of eating and drinking good things on the grounds, the crowd went to the Institute hall where speeches on how to grow and how to market farm products were given by M. J. Soberg, Prof Price of Auburn, and P. K. Valledsen. After the speeches came the tug of war between married and single men. The married men won out after some very hard pulling. The game was much enjoyed by onlookers. The band rendered nice music throughout the day. The Association received this year for strawberries and peaches $20,000, and bought supplies amounting to nearly $5,000.00.

A caucus was held on the evening of the 29th for the purpose of nominating candidates for the coming municipal election. In a speech made by Mayor J. Bice it was shown that the town of Thorsby for the last five years, besides paying some of its debts, has added to the assets of the town the following pieces of property: Water works, an acetylene lighting plant, a road machine, a park and a cemetery. The debts of the town are about $500.00. The following list of names were put up for the people of Thorsby to select their public servants from for the next municipal term: For mayor, J. Bice and E. F. Mead; for aldermen, C. A. Peterson, R. L. Carter, W. H. Williams, Chas. S. Howard, J. O. Johnson, E. H. Adams, E. E. Hanson and James Honeycutt; for school trustees, M. J. Soberg, B. T. Franklin, P. W. Peterson, E. W. Butler, J. R. Parnell, J. A. Carlson, J. J. Stanley and H. L. Foshee.

THE TWINS.

ALABAMA STATE EXPOSITION.

October 16 to 26, 1912.

The Exposition at Montgomery this year will be as it has been heretofore, the greatest display of Agriculture that is made in the United States. Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, after visiting 16 state Fairs said that the Alabama State Exposition had the best display of Agriculture that he had ever seen in the United States. The indications are that the display this year will surpass even that of last year. The United States Government will have charge of the Demonstration work and will have a building exclusively for this purpose. Soil experts will give information of all kinds to those interested, upon the diversivication of crops, also the eradication of ticks and how to fight the boll weevil.

Running up and down stairs, sweeping and bending over making beds will not make a woman healthy or beautiful. She must get out of doors, walk a mile or two every day and take Chamberlain's Tablets to improve her digestion and regulate her bowels. For sale by Alred Drug Co.

MINISTERS CONFERENCE.

Ther will be a Ministers conference at Sardis church, of Chilton County Association, Saturday before the fifth Sunday in September, 1912. The program will be published later. The brethren will take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

DODSON'S LIVER-TONE INSTEAD OF CALOMEL.

Just as Sure—Always Safe—No Bad Effects Ever Follow This Pleasant Tasting Liquid.

As a remedy for a torpid liver calomel has more than met its match in Dodson's Liver-Tone. It does not lash the liver on to perform its work at the cost of its strength.

Calomel depends for its power upon exciting the liver to do more work, and often the liver is too weak to stand such treatment, and you are worse off than before.

Dodson's Liver-Tone cannot cause any of the dangerous effects that often follow the use of calomel. It is entirely vegetable and pleasant to the taste, and is suitable for children and grown people.

Get a 50c bottle at The Upchurch Drug Co. under the guarantee that if it doesn't satisfy you that it is a perfect substitute for calomel your money back.

THE SAFETY of the money on deposit with this Bank is guarded by as careful conservative a Board of Directors as you will find anywhere.

That our people appreciate this conservatism, this care for the safety of their money, is evidenced by the continued increase in our deposits and the growth of our general business.

The management given the affairs of this Bank by our Board of Directors speaks well for the future of the Bank and the prosperity of our patrons.

Now Is Your Opportunity TO GET SOME
Genuine Texas Seed Oats.

I have just received direct from Howe, Texas, a large car of very fine Texas Red Rust Proof Seed Oats. Will say I don't think there has ever been a car of Texas Seed Oats shipped direct from Texas to this County before, and I earnestly urge farmers to plant as many Oats as they can in the latter part of September and October. These Oats are worth 75c per bushel.

GENERAL REMARKS.

Balance Sheet.

The values shown in the Balance Sheet, marked "(A)," were taken from a ledger opened for the Town of Clanton by Mr. J. B. Simpson, Auditor and Accountant, and have not been verified by us.

In folio 11 of this ledger, the net debit of Street Expense account is transferred by the following entry: "Oct. 1, 1910, Capital, $4,627.03."

In folio 19 of this ledger, to the credit of Bonds account (first issue), is this entry: "Sept. 19, 1908, issued, $3,050.00;" and in folio 18, to the debit of Treasury Bonds account, is this entry: "Sept. 19, 1908, with Clerk, $2,250.00."

Town Clerk J. E. Robinson, Jr., informed us, in reply to our request for information, that the bonds in the treasury were not in his possession, that they had not been delivered to him at or since the time he assumed office, and that he did not know who the custodian of the bonds is.

We suggest that the Mayor ascertain whether or not these bonds are in the possession of the proper town official.

It appears that the fourth payment of interest, maturing January 1st, 1911, has been paid on bonds Nos. 40 to 55, inclusive, except on bond No. 47, the interest on which has not been paid in the period covered by the present audit. If bond No. 47 is outstanding, the total number of outstanding bonds, according to the interest payments, is sixteen, which, the par value being $50.00 each, corresponds with the entry in the Balance Sheet.

Warrants No. 1423 to No. 1498.

These warrants were issued prior to October 8th, 1910, countersigned by Town Clerk E. B. Deason, and paid by the Town of Clanton subsequent to that date, the total amount being $1,019.29. Of this total the amount of $948.14 was paid for the town by the Clanton Bank, and carried by it as an overdraft of the town until it was reimbursed by the town by the three checks drawn on the town's funds deposited at the Peoples Savings Bank, Clanton.

The balance of $71.25 was paid by the town, and is comprised of the following items:

No. 1473, $30.00, Sept. 6, 1910, entered in C-B 53, Feb. 4, 1911.
No. 1496, 11.25, Sept. 30, 1910, entered C-B 55, Dec. 30, 1910.
No. 1498, 30.00, Oct. 7, 1910, entered in C-B 60, Feb. 4 1911.

Warrants Nos. 1497 and 1498 for $15.75 and $30.00, respectively, were countersigned by Town Clerk E. B. Deason, but not taken into account by him; the total amount so taken into account being $978.64.

When these warrants were paid by Town Clerk J. E. Robinson, Jr., he entered and distributed them on his Cash Book, causing duplicate charges. We have not examined the distributions made by the former Town Clerk, but submit the entire matter to the Council for its consideration.

prior to October 17th, 1910, as shown in the ledger opened for the Town of Clanton by Mr. J. B. Simpson, although some of the items may not have been charged to this account.

Bond Account—

The bank pass book for the account of the Town of Clanton at the Peoples Savings Bank, Clanton, was balanced at the close of April 15, 1219, showing a balance of $341.06. However, this report is made as of April 17th, 1912, and we have the following certificate from the Peoples Savings Bank, Clanton, certifying as to the balance at that time:

"Clanton, Ala., April 18, 1912.

"Mr. C. S. Huffman, Birmingham, Ala.,

"Dear Sir:

"I, Jno. A. Thomas, Cashier Peoples Savings Bank, Clanton, Ala., certify to the balance of $370.41, Three Hunderd Seventy & 41-100 Dollars due the Town of Clanton by above bank at the close of business April 17, 1912.

(Signed) "JNO. A. THOMAS, Cashier."

The difference between these two balances is accounted for in the following manner:

Balance April 15, 1912, per pass book		$431.06
Deposit made April 17, 1912		195.00
		$536.06
Less check cashed for Jim Mims	$ 5.65
for J. M. Morgan	160.00
		165.65
Balance April 17, 1912, per certificate		$370.41

Report of last audit.

We requested Town Clerk J. E. Robinson, Jr., to submit the report of Mr. J. B. Simpson, Auditor and Accountant, on the condition of the Town of Clanton, which was made by him about September, 1910, and we were informed that the report had not been delivered to him. Mr. Robinson then called on former Town Clerk E. B. Deason, at our request, for the report, as it covered in whole or in part the administration of Mr. Deason up to the time he retired from the office of the Town Clerk. Mr. Robinson informed us that Mr. Deason stated that he, Mr. Deason, had examined the report and then had delivered it to the Council of the Town of Clanton holding office at the time the audit was made by Mr. Simpson, and that he, Mr. Deason, did not know its present location. We were, therefore, unable to secure the report, which we wished to use as the basis for beginning our audit.

The statement we have compiled, Exhibit I, based on the warrants countersigned by former Town Clerk E. B. Deason and paid by the present Town Clerk J. B. Robinson, Jr., does not correspond exactly with the closing entries in the Cash Book of the former Town Clerk, and we have not verified the said entries nor located the difference. None of the warrants, bank checks or other vouchers of former Town Clerk E. B. Deason were submitted for examination, except those warrants paid by the present Clerk.

The warrants submitted were Nos. 1423 to 1794, inclusive, except No. 1622, the stub of which is marked "Spoiled." Of these warrants, Nos. 1423 to 1498, inclusive, were countersigned by Mr. E. B. Deason as Town Clerk; and Nos. 1499 to 1794, inclusive, except No. 1622, were countersigned by Mr. J. E. Robinson, Jr., as Town Clerk.

Taxes and Licenses.

The first Real Estate and Personal Property tax receipt taken into account by Town Clerk J. E. Robinson, Jr., is No. 184, for $15.50, issued January 3rd, 1911; the last is No. 537, for $5.65, issued March 25th, 1912.

There are a number of receipts between these two numbers (184 and 537) filled in and still in the book. A number have also been taken into account by former Town Clerk E. B. Deason, but such income has not been verified by us.

Receipts for Licenses issued by Town Clerk J. E. Robinson, Jr., for the year 1910 are Nos. 101 to 106; for the year 1911 are Nos. 1 to 138, and for the year 1912 (to date of this audit) are Nos. 1 to 62, each number inclusive.

Receipt for license No. 1, for the year 1912, is filled in and attached to the stub. It is made to the Clanton Press Company and the Town Clerk informs us they will not pay for it because they have an account against the Town of Clanton which the Council has not passed on. The amount is $10.00.

The stub for license No. 41 for the year 1912, bears this notation: "Torn out by party unknown. J. E. B., Clerk."

The number of all the receipts issued by the Town Clerk for taxes and licenses collected by him is entered in his Cash Book.

Fines.

The fines received from the Recorder's Court by the Town Clerk are receipted for by him with his initials, "J. E. R., Jr.," entered near the fine assessed as recorded in the Mayor's Docket; and the number of the case, as recorded in the Mayor's Docket, is entered in the Town Clerk's Cash Book.

Fines assessed and collected in the Recorder's Court; entered in the Mayor's Docket as case No. 399, for seventy-five cents, with date of payment omitted; and case No. 376, for $2.50, paid April 17th, 1911, have not been paid to the Town Clerk. The first fine mentioned was assessed by, former Mayor J. M. Potts, and the second by Mayor Dr. E. A. Matthews.

Street Taxes.

The street tax collections reported by Mr. J. M. Morgan, as shown by his receipt stubs and memorandum, are distributed as follows:

Year 1910, no receipt stubs submitted for examination, reports 35 collections of $3.00 each	$105.00
Year 1910, receipt stubs submitted, dating from November 28 to December 22, 1910, stubs for 34 collections of $3.00 each	102.00
Year 1911, receipt stubs submitted, dating from December 19 to 30, 1911, stubs for 40 collections of $3.00 each	120.00
Year 1911, receipt stubs submitted, dated December 31, 1911, stubs for 28 collections of $3.00 each	84.00
Total	$411.00
Year 1910, 69 collections of $3.00 each	$207.00
Year 1911, 68 collections of $3.00 each	204.00
Total 137 collections of $3.00 each	$411.00

The receipt stubs are not numbered and are much too small to admit of a clear and accurate record being made.

Salaries.

Exhibit H. The item marked "(A)" is qualified as follows: The salary of Mr. J. M. Morgan for the month of February 5th to March 5th, 1911, is covered by warrant No. 1634 for $40.00 (outstanding at this time), dated March 25th, 1911, but the warrant has not been paid by the Town of Clanton. The total salary paid Mr. Morgan, as evidenced by warrants issued by the Mayor, is $900.00.

Minutes.

The minutes of the meetings of the Council of the Town of Clanton have not been properly entered and signed, as follows:

The meeting of—

October 5, 1910. Minutes are not entered in full in the minute book. Memorandum of part of the proceedings pinned to page 105 of minute book. They are not signed.

November 30, 1910. Minutes are not signed by acting Mayor or Town Clerk.

January 24, 1911. Minutes are not signed by Mayor.

March 6, 1911. Minutes are not signed by Mayor.

April 3, 1911. Minutes are not signed by Mayor or Town Clerk.

May 30, 1911. Minutes are not signed by Mayor or Town Clerk.

June 6, 1911. Minutes are not signed by Mayor or Town Clerk.

August 18, 1911. Minutes are not signed by Mayor or Town Clerk.

January 1, 1912. Minutes are not entered in minute book. Memorandum of the proceedings of the meeting in the book. Not signed by Mayor or Town Clerk.

Bond interest coupons.

Several of the interest coupons detached from the bonds of the Town of Clanton and paid by the Town Clerk, were not stamped or marked paid. We suggest that those he has paid, as well as all those he may pay in the future, be so cancelled or punched that there could be no question as to their having been redeemed by the town.

Payment by bank cheque.

We suggest that the Town Clerk pay all warrants, insofar as it may be practicable for him so to do, by cheque drawn on the funds of the town deposited at bank, being particular to show on the cheque or cheque stub the number of the warrant on which the payment is to apply. And that he deposit at bank all collections made by him for the town, insofar as practicable; and that he make as few disbursements for the account of the town with actual money or currency as may be expedient.

Value of School Property entered in Balance Sheet.

The value of this property as entered in the Balance Sheet, and marked "(A)" is taken from the ledger opened for the town by Mr. J. B. Simpson, in which the following entry is recorded in folio 17, under the caption "School Lot and Building" Account:

"Sept. 19, 1908, Lot and Building, $4,000.00."

We have not verified either the entry or the value.

Cash.

date of this audit, April 17th, 1912, namely, $372.90, was not actually on hand, and was not verified by us by count, but represents items due the Town of Clanton and in course of collection at that time.

The receipts issued by the Town Clerk for the taxes and license of the Clanton Bank, were charged to the Clerk, but he was unable to collect the money at that time because of the absence from the town of the cashier of the bank.

The receipt issued by the Town Clerk for the taxes of Dr. E. A. Matthews was charged to the clerk, but he was unable to collect the money at that time because of the absence from town of Dr. Matthews.

The item shown as having been collected for street taxes, namely, $56.00, was in course of collection at that time, and, we unedrstand, was collected later in the day, and should have been deposited to the credit of the Town of Clanton at bank not later than the next regular banking day.

The items of $5.75 and 18 cents are shortages due to clerical errors in the accounts of the Town Clerk, and should be paid to the town at the time this report is submitted to the Town Clerk for his examination, if not before.

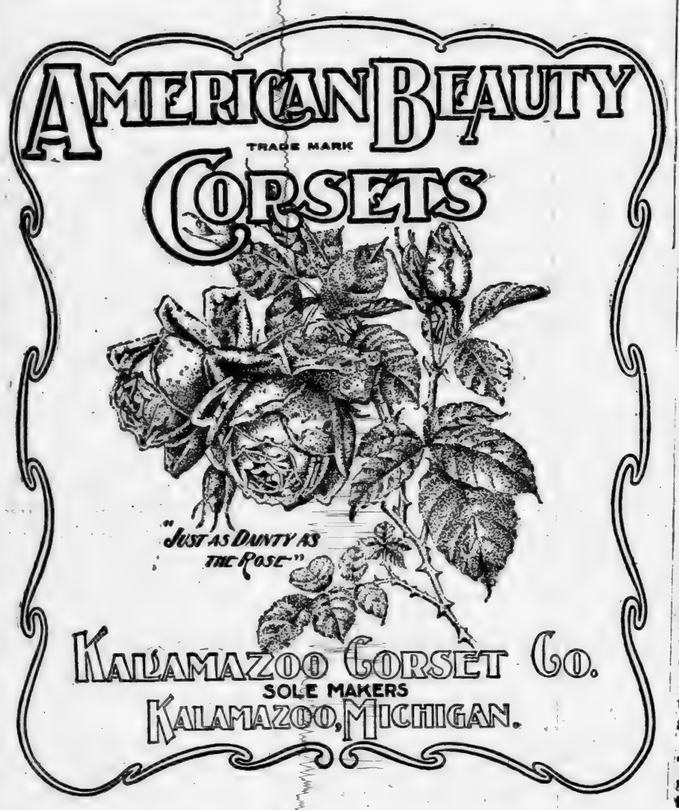
The items amounting to $23.80 with Town Attorney Mullins are collections made by him which he has no doubt paid to the Town Clerk previous to the date of this report.

Books and Records.

We found the Cash Book of the Town Clerk in good condition, all of the entries being neat and legible, the addition, with one exception, being correct.

In folio 64 of the Clerk's Cash Book, for the month of March, 1911, the total receipts for the month are added as $1.289.35, the correct addition being $1,279.35. The licenses issued during that month are added as $386.00, and should be $376.00.

We suggest that a warrant be issued in favor of Mr. Robinson for $10.00 to reimburse him; a detailed explanation of the error being entered in the warrant, and the amount charged to the license income for the year 1912.



OLD FIRE DOG IS PENSIONED

Pet That Followed Engines on Every Call Is Spending His Declining Years at Summer Resort.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Bearing the marks of many wounds received in honorable service, and having passed the age limit at which retirement is compulsory, Mack, the erstwhile mascot at Brooklyn fire headquarters, has been retired on a pension and is passing his declining years at a hotel on Shelter Island, L. I., where he is disproving the adage that an old dog cannot be taught new tricks.

Mack has become a "buff" of the Shelter Island Fire department, but cannot find enough exercise in the task to keep in physical condition. Instead of running to a fire a dozen times a day, as he did when at the Brooklyn fire headquarters, Mack now is lucky if he has a call to a fire once a month.

When the time hangs heavily he amuses visitors at the hotel by running up a ladder with the agility of a fireman. When Warren Schneider, the Brooklyn fireman who was counted as Mack's best friend, sent him to the hotel, Schneider said he did not believe Mack would live a month so far away from fire headquarters, but Michael Stacano made a bet with Schneider that not only the mascot would live but that he was not too old to learn a new trick.

Mack has fulfilled the prediction. Henry Walther, proprietor of the hotel, writes to Schneider that Mack is a big favorite with the visitors. He has taught the fire dog to extinguish lighted cigars and cigarettes thrown on the hotel veranda and to "play dead" and chase a ball with the children.

Mack had many escapes from death when he was running with the Brooklyn firemen. Once he was run over by the chief's wagon and a policeman was about to end his agony when firemen interfered and saved his life. Many times he has been kicked by the horses, but always recovered under prompt surgical treatment.

Too Fast.

"I don't believe in forcing schools for children," said Gov. Woodrow Wilson at a dinner in Trenton. "A child that knows at four as much as ordinarily it would know at eight, is, to my mind, about as tasteful an object as Calhoun Clay's watch.

"'That's a fine watch you've got there, Calhoun,' said a friend. 'Is it a good goer?'

"'A good goer?' said Calhoun Clay. 'Well, you bet your life it's a good goer. Why, it can do an hour in half the time!'"

"Silver Threads Among the Gold"

Gray hair is a beautiful thing.

In the ripeness of old age, and the evening of life, hair ought to be gray. Nature in her wise economy provides gray hairs as a mark of distinction when life's sands are running low.

But for folks in the prime of life to have gray or falling hair is abnormal.

It shows a lack of care or knowledge, or both.

For anybody can avoid gray hairs who wants to. And anybody can quickly prevent the hair from falling out or growing dull by knowing the cause and applying common sense.

The only cause of premature gray hair or loss of hair is lack of sulphur. When the blood fails to furnish sulphur in sufficient quantity, the hair falls out or turns gray.

And this lack of sulphur is first indicated by dandruff germs which are the signals of danger—the sentinels that tell when the hair begins to suffer for want of enough sulphur in the blood.

Just a few applications of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy at this time will quickly kill the dandruff germs and at the same time supply in the only direct way the sulphur which the falling hair so sadly needs.

Not only does this remedy remove the cause of gray hair but through the addition of the sage it restores the hair to its natural color. For as you probably know, sage has a remarkable darkening effect on hair.

First Application Darkens Gray Hair

The process is just exactly like fertilizing an orchard or a dying tree—giving it the nourishment that the natural soil lacks. You can't restore a dying tree by painting the bark.

It is only within recent years that this great fact about hair troubles has become generally known. Science in her onward march has established beyond question the cause of falling or changing hair, and has traced it directly to this lack of sulphur to sustain the natural color and luxuriance of the hair.

And the cause being located, the remedy was quickly found.

Thousands and thousands of cases that yield to no other treatment have quickly responded to this simple, natural remedy. Dandruff germs have been quickly eradicated, the scalp cleaned, and the hair restored to youthful lustre and brilliancy by the use of one bottle.

WYETH'S SAGE and SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY

not only kills the dandruff germs, but sets to work at once to nourish the hair and provide the tiny follicles with the very food they need.

It quickly makes the hair soft, glossy and luxurious. The change after a few applications is marvelous. The nourishing and vitalizing effect is manifest almost at once.

WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY
Darkens the Hair Naturally

Don't Experiment with Old Fashioned Hair Dyes

No matter how often remedies have failed in your case, no matter how much you have been disappointed in "hair growers," or restorers, it is worth your while to try this simple common sense remedy. You run no risk. If not exactly as represented your money will be refunded.

TO MARK OLDEST HOUSE

Commemorative Plate Will be Placed on Residence Erected in City of Paris in 1407.

Paris.—A commemorative plate is about to be placed on the oldest house in Paris, 51 Rue de Montmorency, in the Temple district. It is a corner house just off the Boulevard Sebastopol, at the junction of the Rue St. Martin with the Rue de Montmorency. The house, which was built in 1407 by the philanthropist Nicolas Flamel, is now known as the Hotel Helvetia, and also as the Taverne Nicolas Flamel. It was originally built as a hostelry for workingmen, the revenue from whose lodging was used to pay for the food they consumed. Some years go when the front of the house was restored inscriptions were laid bare which revealed the original purposes of the building.

Dogs as Beasts of Burden.

A memory of the times when dogs worked for a living in England is seen in the "dog cart," which originally was literally drawn by dogs, and, until prohibited in 1839 by act of parliament, was the workingman's usual means of taking a run into the country. Strong half-bred mastiffs were usually employed, and these thought nothing of conveying their masters 50 or 60 miles in a day with no more sustenance than bread soaked in beer.

If you knew of the real value of Chamberlain's Liniment for lame back, soreness of the muscles, sprins and rheumatic pains, you would never wish to be without it. For sale by Alred Drug Co.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

Nervous? Thin? Pale?

Are you easily tired, lack your usual vigor and strength? Then your digestion must be poor, your blood must be thin, your nerves must be weak. You need a strong tonic. You need Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the only Sarsaparilla entirely free from alcohol. We believe your doctor will endorse these statements. Ask and find out.

If you think constipation is of trifling consequence, just ask your doctor. He will disabuse you of that notion in short order. "Correct it at once!" he will say. Then ask him about Ayer's Pills. A mild liver pill, all vegetable.

How Hot Is Lava?

To ascertain the temperature of lava as it is emitted from a volcano has baffled many scientists. The Roman academy has just published the results of the investigations made by Giovani Platania during the eruption of Etna last year.

The eruption began September 10 and the scientist was unable to approach the mountain for ten days, when one crater was still in action. He camped as near as he could to this crater, close to a stream of lava flowing about a yard a second.

Using the new "telescope pyrometer," he got temperatures for the surface of the lava flow of all the way from 1,040 to 1,420 degrees.

A second series of observations, taken at a distance of a dozen feet, gave figures as high as 1,500 degrees. The estimates are that the incandescent lava, as it comes directly from the crater, has a temperature not less than 2,200 degrees.

An article that has real merit should in time become popular. That such is the case with Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has been attested by many dealers. Here is one of them. H. W. Hendrickson, Ohio Falls, Ind., writes: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best for coughs, colds and croup, and is my best seller." For sale by Alred Drug Co.

(Copyright, 1911, The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

"You swear you'll do your part?" he said thickly. He took his purse from his pocket and counted out the amount due Hicks. He named the total, and paused irresolutely.

"Don't you want the fire lighted?" asked Hicks. He was familiar with his employer's vacillating moods.

"Yes," answered Ware, his lips quivering; and slowly, with shaking fingers, he added to the pile of bills in Hicks' hand.

"Well, take care of yourself," said Hicks, when the count was complete. He thrust the roll of bills into his pocket and moved to the door.

Alone again, the planter collapsed into his chair, breathing heavily, but his terrors swept over him and left him with a savage sense of triumph. This passed; he sprang up, intending to recall Hicks and unmake his bargain. What had he been thinking of—safety lay only in flight! Before he reached the door his greed was in the ascendant. He dropped down on the edge of his bed, his eyes fixed on the window. The sun sank lower. From where he sat he saw it through the upper half of the sash, blood-red and livid in a mist of fleecy clouds.

It was in the tops of the old oaks now, which sent their shadows into terrors, he started and backed toward the door; but again his greed, the one dominating influence of his life, vanquished him.

He watched the sun sink. He watched the red splendor fade over the river; he saw the first stars appear. He told himself that Hicks would soon be gone—if the fire was not to be lighted he must act at once! He stole to the window. It was dusk now, yet he could distinguish the distant wooded boundaries of the great fields framed by the darkening sky. Then in the silence he heard the thud of hoofs.

CHAPTER XXVI.

The Judge Names His Second.

"Price—" began Mahaffy. They were back in Raleigh in the room the judge called his office, and this was Mahaffy's first opportunity to ease his mind on the subject of the duel, as they had only just parted from Yancy and Cavendish, who had stopped at one of the stores to make certain purchases for the raft.

"Not a word, Solomon—it had to come. I am going to kill him. I shall feel better then."

"What if he kills you?" demanded

"It Will Be Quite Informal, the Code Is Scarcely Applicable."

Mahaffy harshly. The judge shrugged his shoulders.

"That is as it may be."

"Have you forgotten your grandson?" Mahaffy's voice was still harsh and rasping.

"I regard my meeting with Fentress as nothing less than a sacred duty to him."

"We know no more than we did this morning," said Mahaffy. "You are mixing up all sorts of side issues with what should be your real purpose."

"Not at all, Solomon—not at all! I look upon my grandson's speedy recovery as an assured fact. Fentress dare not hold him. He knows he is run to earth at last."

"Price—"

"No, Solomon—no, my friend, we will not speak of it again. You will go back to Belle Plain with Yancy and Cavendish; you must represent me there. We have as good as found Hannibal, but we must be active in Miss Malroy's behalf. For us that has an important bearing on the future, and since I cannot, you must be at Belle Plain when Carrington arrives with his pack of dogs. Give him the advantage of your sound and mature judgment, Solomon; don't let any false modesty keep you in the background."

"Who's going to accept you?" stamped Mahaffy.

The judge was a picture of indifference.

"It will be quite informal, the code is scarcely applicable; I merely intend to remove him because he is not fit to live."

"At sun-up!" muttered Mahaffy.

"I intend to start one day right even if I never live to begin another," said the judge, a sudden fierce light flashing from his eyes. "I feel that this is the turning point in my career, Solomon!" he went on. "The beginning of great things! But I shall take no chances with the future; I shall prepare for every possible contingency. I am going to make you and Yancy my grandson's guardians. There's a hundred thousand acres of land hereabout that must come to him. I shall outline in writing the legal steps to be taken to substantiate his claims. Also he will inherit largely from me at my death."

Something very like laughter escaped from Mahaffy's lips.

"There you go, Solomon, with your inopportune mirth! What in God's name have I if I haven't hope? Take that from me and what would I be? Why, the very fate I have been fighting off with tooth and nail would overwhelm me. I'd sink into unimportance—my unparalleled misfortunes would degrade me to a level with the commonest! No, sir, I've never been without hope, and though I've fallen I've always got up. What Fentress has is based on money he stole from me. By God, the days of his profit-taking are at an end! I am going to strip him. And even if I don't live to enjoy what's mine, my grandson shall! He shall wear velvet and a lace collar and ride his pony yet, by God, as a gentleman's grandson should!"

"It sounds well, Price, but where's the money coming from to push a lawsuit?"

The judge waved this aside.

"The means will be found, Solomon. Our horizon is lifting—I can see it lift! Don't drag me back from the portal of hope! We'll drink the stuff that comes across the water; I'll warm the cockles of your heart

Bess Leads to Betty.

Just where he had parted from Ware, Carrington sat his horse, his brows knit and his eyes turned in the direction of the path. He was on his way to a plantation below Birard, the owner of which had recently imported a pack of bloodhounds; but this unexpected encounter with Ware had affected him strangely. He still heard Tom's stammering speech, he was still seeing his ghastly face, and he had come upon him with startling suddenness. He had chanced to look back over his shoulder and when he faced about there had been the planter within a hundred yards of him.

Presently Carrington's glance ceased to follow the windings of the path. He stared down at the gray dust and saw the trail left by Hues and his party. For a moment he hesitated; if the dogs were to be used with any hope of success he had no time to spare, and this was the merest suspicion, illogical conjecture, based on nothing beyond his distrust of Ware. In the end he sprang from the saddle, and leading his horse into the woods, tied it to a sapling.

A hurried investigation told him that five men had ridden in and out of that path. Of the five, all coming from the south, four had turned south again, but the fifth man—Ware, in other words—had gone north. He weighed the possible significance of these facts.

"I am only wasting time!" he confessed reluctantly, and was on the point of turning away, when, on the very edge of the road and just where the dust yielded to the hard clay of the path, his glance lighted on the print of a small and daintily shod foot. The throbbing of his heart quickened curiously.

"Betty!" The word leaped from his lips.

That small foot had left but the one impress. There were other signs, however, that claimed his attention; namely, the boot-prints of Slosson and his men; and he made the inevitable discovery that these tracks were all confined to the one spot. They began suddenly and as suddenly ceased, yet there was no mystery about these; he had the marks of the wheels to help him to a sure conclusion. A carriage had turned just here, several men had alighted; they had with them a child, or a woman. Either they had re-entered the carriage and driven back as they had come, or they had gone toward the river. He felt the soul within him turn sick.

He stole along the path; the terror of the river was ever in his thoughts, and the specter of his fear seemed to flit before him and lure him on. Presently he caught his first glimpse of the bayou and his legs shook under him; but the path wound deeper still into what appeared to be an untouched solitude, wound on between the crowding tree forms, a little back from the shore, with an intervening tangle of vines and bushes. He scanned this closely as he hurried forward, scarcely conscious that he was searching for some trampled space at the water's edge; but the verdant wall preserved its unbroken continuity, and twenty minutes later he came within sight of Hicks' clearing and the keel boat, where it rested against the bank.

A little farther on he found the spot where Slosson had launched the skiff the night before. The keel of his boat had cut deep into the slippery clay; more than this, the impress of the small shoe was repeated here, and just beside it was the print of a child's bare foot.

He no longer doubted that Hicks years' hunger and thirst under my wes-coat, and I'll feed and drink like a gentleman yet!" The judge smacked his lips in an ecstacy of enjoyment, and dropping down before the table which served him as a desk, seized a pen.

"It's good enough to think about, Price," admitted Mahaffy grudgingly.

"It's better to do; and if anything happens to me the papers I am going to leave will tell you how it's to be done. Man, there's a million of money in sight, and we've got to get it and spend it and enjoy it! None of your swinish thrift for me, but life on a big scale—company, and feasting, and refined surroundings!"

"And you are going to meet Fentress in the morning?" asked Mahaffy. "I suppose there's no way of avoiding that?"

"Avoiding it?" almost shouted the judge. "For what have I been living? I shall meet him, let the consequences be what they may. Tonight when I have reduced certain facts to writing I shall join you at Belle Plain. The strange and melancholy history of my life I shall place in your hands for safe keeping. In the morning I can be driven back to Boggs'."

"And you will go there without a second?"

"If necessary; yes."

"I declare, Price, you are hardly fitted to be at large! Why, you act as if you were tired of life! There's Yancy—there's Cavendish!"

The judge gave him an indulgent but superior smile.

"Two very worthy men, but I go to Boggs' attended by a gentleman or I go there alone. I am aware of your prejudices, Solomon; otherwise I might ask this favor of you."

Mr. Mahaffy snorted loudly and turned to the door, for Yancy and Cavendish were now approaching the house, the latter with a meal sack slung over his shoulder.

"Here, Solomon, take one of my pistols," urged the judge hastily. "You may need it at Belle Plain. Good by, and God bless you!"

CHAPTER XXVII.

"Listen, George—it's Carrington—I am going to take off this gag, but don't speak above a whisper—they may hear us!" And he cut the cords that held the gag in place.

"How yo' get here, Mas'r Ca'ington?" asked the negro guardedly, as the gag fell away.

He Was as Securely Gagged as He Was Bound.

"Around the head of the bayou."

"Where's Miss Betty?"

"She's in the cabin yonder—fo' the love of God, cut these here other ropes with yo' knife, Mas'r Ca'ington—I'm perishin' with 'em!" Carrington did as he asked, and groaning, George sat erect. "I'm like I was gone to sleep all over," he said.

"You'll feel better in a moment. Tell me about Miss Malroy?"

"They done fetched us here last night. I was drivin' Missy into Raleigh—her and young Mas'r Hazard—when fo' men stop us in the road."

"Who were they, do you know?" asked Carrington.

"Lawd—what's that?"

Carrington, knife in hand, swung the bayou to the cabin, and he ran back up the path the distance of a mile and plunged into the woods on his right, his purpose being to pass around the head of the expanse of sluggish water to a point from which he could later approach the cabin.

But the cabin proved to be better defended than he had foreseen; and as he advanced, the difficulties of the task he had set himself became almost insurmountable; yet sustained as he was by his imperative need, he tore his way through the labyrinth of trailing vines, or floundered across acre-wide patches of green slime and black mud, which at each step threatened to engulf him in their treacherous depths, until at the end of an hour he gained the southern side of the clearing and a firmer footing within the shelter of the woods.

Here he paused and took stock of his surroundings. The two or three buildings Mr. Hicks had erected stood midway of the clearing and were very modest improvements adapted to their owner's somewhat flippant pursuit of agriculture. While Carrington was still staring about him, the cabin door swung open and a woman stepped forth. It was the girl Bess. She went to a corner of the building and called loudly:

"Joe! Oh, Joe!"

A Thorough Test of Mastic Paint

"The Kind That Lasts"

May 10th, 1911.

Peaslee-Gaulbert Co., Louisville, Ky.

Gentlemen: Confirming our conversation of yesterday, we beg to say that after building our village at New Holland, Ga., we experimented with various paints by painting ten houses each weatherboarded with long leaf yellow pine of some half dozen various paints.

One section of ten houses we used lead and oil, the remaining fifty houses covered in ten lots each by the same painters we used paints most commonly used in this section of the country which are considered to be A one. After eight years we find that the ten cottages covered with "Mastic" stands better than any of the others even including lead and oil.

We heartily endorse Mastic paint to any one who is a buyer.

Yours truly,
PACOLET MANUFACTURING CO.
By W. M. [illegible] Treas.

VMM/H.
VMM/H.

Not many have the opportunity to make as thorough a test to determine paint value as did the Pacolet Cotton Mills, of South Carolina, whose letter we are reproducing.

But you can profit by their experience.

There is an element of chance in buying anything until you know it has stood the test.

MASTIC PAINT is the result of 40 years' paint study, and is the finest paint that money and brains can produce.

Is it any wonder it has always given better and longer service than any other paint, whether machine ground or mixed with a paddle?

When you buy MASTIC PAINT you find the formula on every can. IT'S PURE. It combines the greatest durability with reasonable cost.

If you are a paint user don't experiment with cheap, uncertain paint or hand mixed keg lead, and be disappointed.

GET MASTIC PAINT—the kind that lasts. We will furnish ample evidence of its superiority.

WHY THE ALABAMA STATE FAIR IS A BIG SUCCESS

Show Window of State's Resources is Fostered by Men Known in All Parts of Alabama as Most Successful in Business.

The character of the men who are directing the Alabama State Fair is evidence enough within itself that the Fair is one which merits the patronage of Alabama people, for they are numbered among those who have made Alabama and are still making it.

The Alabama State Fair is the one annual event in which every one in Alabama is interested, and which benefits directly or indirectly benefits all parts of the State. It is the show window of the State's resources and shows in concrete form the advance improvement in all the varied industries of our great Commonwealth. As a means of advertising and exploiting the State as a whole its value is incalculable.

SIGNOR A. LIBERATI,

Director of the Famous Band to Play at Alabama State Fair.

The State Fair is not a money-making venture. In fact, such expositions are, as a rule, run at a monetary loss, and where such loss occurs the deficit falls on the promoters. It is shown by conducting the Alabama State Fair on strictly business principles that it has, of late, been put on a paying basis.

The Alabama State fair has some of the strongest and most conservative business men of the "Magic City" behind it. Men who have been successful in their own line of business and who give their time and experience to the management of the Fair not only as a matter of public spirit but through their interest in their State as a whole. The following is a roster of the management, and a glance at it will show many names prominent in Birmingham's business circles:

Mr. J. H. Holcombe, the president, is also president of the Business Men's League. He was president of the State Fair in 1910, when it scored its first big success. He is a man of affairs who gives his time and talents to the State Fair.

Mr. Geo. A. Blinn, Jr., the vice president, is prominent in Birmingham's business circles as is Mr Betram Jacobs, the treasurer.

Mr. Jno. L. Parker, chairman of the executive committee, has held that position for several years and is also president of the Birmingham Board of Education.

Mr. Frank P. Chaffee, secretary manager, has been identified with State Fair work for several years. He is also secretary of the Business Men's League of Birmingham, and was for years director of the Government Weather service in Alabama.

The Directors are: Jack Adams, Robert H. Baugh, Colman Blach, Geo A. Blinn, R. A. Brown, J. Burger, R D. Burnett, B. B. Burton, Sol Caheen, M. A. Myatt, Eugene Fies, A. H. Ford, J. H. Holcombe, Bertram Jacobs, A W. B. Johnson, M. V. Joseph, Ferd Marx, George McCleery, R. W. Ewing, John W. O'Neill, John L. Parker, L Fizitz, Geo. D. Reynolds, J. N. Rose, Herman Saks, H. G. Seibles, G. B. McVay, W. T. Cox, all represent the largest concerns of the Magic City, which of course, are the largest of the State.

ALABAMA STATE FAIR'S EXCELLENT HORSE SHOW

Alabama horseflesh will be creditably shown in the Alabama State Fair at Birmingham, October 3-12, 1912, for the horse show there this fall will by far surpass anything of its kind ever held in this state.

The horse show will be under the direct supervision of Moxie Fies, one of the leading horsemen of Alabama and a man who knows a horse and what a horse should be.

Last year the horses that were assembled at the Alabama State Fair were the marvel of all who visited it. Not only were Alabama horses there in great array, but representative horses of all standard breds from all sections of the United States were there in twos, threes, and fours.

The greatest live stock parade ever pulled off in Alabama will take place every day between October 3 and 12 at the Alabama State Fair grounds, at Birmingham. Come up and see it.

WOMAN FLIES IN PLANE

Philadelphia Resident of Reno Divorce Colony Makes First Ascent in Frisco.

San Francisco.—Mrs. Jane Wildman, bent on becoming a professional aviatrix, made her initial flight on the Alamera marshes across the bay from this city. She rose 3,000 feet and circled over the city of Oakland before descending. She was accompanied by Roy Francis, an aviator.

Mrs. Wildman appeared on the field in a rose-colored coat and a white corduroy skirt, and stood her first test remarkably well. She said she liked sensations and that her best substitute for the aeroplane heretofore had been 90 miles an hour on a motorcycle.

The aviatrix is the wife of Frederick Collis Wildman of Philadelphia, who at present is in London. She is visiting San Francisco for a few days.

"I am from Reno," said Mrs. Wildman, "and that tells the story."

APACHE SLANG PARIS FAD

Exploits of French Motor Car Bandits Make Underworld Language Popular.

Paris.—The slang of the Paris Apaches is the latest fad taken up in society circles here. Not only French people, but also foreigners of the fashionable set here, are now vying with each other in picking up the largest stock of words and phrases of argot spoken on fortifications and in the outer slums.

Slang dictionaries are sold to tourists at the boulevard kiosks, and society women are taking lessons in argot, for which, of course, high fees are charged by the instructors.

Several American women are among those taking lessons, and it is believed to be one of them who originated the idea. The fad is thought to have arisen in consequence of the intense interest taken in the Paris underworld through the exploits of the motor bandits.

TURKEYS TO FIGHT WORMS

Only Way to Get Rid of the "Pests," Says a Georgia Farmer—Congress Gives $25,000 for Work.

Washington.—M. M. Kicklighter, a farmer at Groveland, Ga., has sent this tip to congress of a way to rid the south of the army worm:

"I saw your advertisement in the Atlanta paper for aid to check the army worm. I had ten acres of corn and the army worms had just started in. I drove my turkeys in my field and they ate the army worms up in two days, and if it had not been for my turkeys I would have lost 500 bushels of corn by those worms.

"So please send me a check for said amount, for that is the only way to destroy the army worms."

Congress recently appropriated $25,000 to eliminate the worm.

OLD PILOT IS DEAD

Hero of "Life on the Mississippi," on Duty to End.

Famous Character Resented Notoriety—Disliked Use of His Name by Mark Twain, Who Was Under His Tutelage.

St. Louis, Mo.—Horace E. Bixby, the best known of the Mississippi river pilots, who taught the art to Mark Twain, is dead. Captain Bixby died suddenly at his home.

Dr. Rolla Bracy, coroner of St. Louis county, who held an inquest, said death was caused by apoplexy. Captain Bixby was eighty-six years old, and was still in the river service at the time of his death. He daily expected a call to take out the government towboat Nokomis. He arose early and dressed. A little later his wife went to his room and found him lying dead on his bed. He died as he often had said he wished to die, "in the harness."

Captain Bixby's fame rests upon the writing of a cub pilot, one of the many youths he taught—Samuel Clemens (Mark Twain). He made an epic of the days he spent with Bixby and the pilot's name was known throughout the world. Captain Bixby received hundreds of letters from strangers who knew him solely through Mark Twain's books. This became distasteful to him, and during late years he had avoided all mention of Mark Twain's name.

The sixty-six years Captain Bixby spent in the pilot house marked the growth and gradual decline of steamboat days on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. While pilot on the Missouri river in 1856-58 his boat would be stopped by buffalo herds crossing the river one day and by Sioux warriors the next.

In the Civil war he was chief pilot for the Union fleet besieging Vicksburg and Memphis. He always held the Union victory at Memphis due to the information he gave Commodore Foote. Later, as a principal stockholder and commander of the finest steamboats in the Anchor service, Captain Bixby was known the length of the Mississippi. He ran the City of Alton when it made the single trip record of $70,000 clear.

On the decline of river commerce he entered government service.

Captain Bixby was pilot of the Paul Jones about 1856, when Samuel Clemens became his pupil. Clemens then gathered material later used for his "Life on the Mississippi." Years later, after he won literary fame, he made a trip from St. Louis to New Orleans with Captain Bixby, and only a few years ago was his guest in St Louis.

Captain Bixby was of small physique, nervous and wiry. He had a tremendous energy. Throughout his river service he kept a diary, recording daily the events and the shifting of the river current. This record the United States government is anxious to get and it probably will be embodied in a book which will further perpetuate Captain Bixby's fame.

Mark Twain in his writing made Captain Bixby out a profane man. This was incorrect, his other friends say. He was, by reputation, gentle in speech and courteous to all men he met.

STATE WILL HONOR SCORE

Three Daughters of California Are Selected and Public May Name the Remainder.

San Francisco.—San Francisco is to have a hall of fame. Therein the 20 native sons and daughters of California who have done most to reflect glory on their state are to be honored in art glass and sculpture.

The temple is being erected by the Native Sons organization. In the main hall are 20 oval frames, garlanded with laurel wreaths. In each will be placed the art glass effigy of one who had helped make history in California.

Three daughters of the state—Gertrude Atherton, Sybil Sanderson and Mary Anderson—have been selected for the honor. The public is invited to name the remaining 17.

On the temple walls will be placed portraits of many who, though not natives of California, have been identified with the state.

MARBLE PAY RATE IS LOW

Nineteen Cents to $1.93 a Day is the Wage of Carrara Workers, Says Consular Report.

Washington.—An interesting description of the world-famous Carrara marble of Italy is given in a report by Consular Agent Felix A. Delmas who is stationed at Carrara.

What he says on the subject of wages, however, gives no reason for congratulation to the poorly paid employes who have to do with Carrara marble.

Delmas says the daily wages, which have been slightly increased within the last few years, are, quarrymen, 48 cents to $1.93; mill operators, 38 cents to $1.15; marble cutters, 28 to 57 cents; studio workers and sculptors 48 cents to $8.21; and boys, 19 to 31 cents.

GIRL WOULD JOIN THE NAVY

Newburg Miss Tries to Enlist, but Uncle Sam Says No—Declares She Was Born at Sea.

Newburg, N. Y.—Catherine Elliott, 18 years old, applied at the navy recruiting station for enlistment. Her father was a sea captain. She gave her birthplace as "at sea, bound from Melbourne to New Orleans," and she was raised afloat.

Miss Elliott was disappointed when informed that men-of-war were only for men, and said she would communicate with the navy department and learn the reason. She speaks five languages, has been in twelve countries, sailed on seven seas, and can take a trick at the wheel.

Strindberg Not at Home.

In an appreciative article upon the late August Strindberg, which appears in Harper's weekly, James Huneker describes his interview with the Swedish writer. He traveled from New York in the hope of meeting him. It was a chilly night in June when his friends threw gravel at Strindberg's window and bawled at him. Presently a tremendous head on a tremendous pair of shoulders came into view. A volley of words, a verbal broadside, and the window crashed down again. "After the laughter had died away I innocently asked what he had said as he retired," writes this author. "He told you to go to h—— and never bother him again," he was informed.

FIND A USE FOR SWEEPINGS

Street Refuse Makes Good Fertilizer If It Is Quite Free From Oil.

The United States department of agriculture has been conducting elaborate experiments to ascertain the value of street sweepings as a fertilizer. J. J. Skinner and J. H. Beattie of the bureau of soils tried samples collected in various ways upon wheat, corn and radishes and found that hand sweepings were best, but not nearly so good as well-rotted stable manure; that machine sweepings were about one-third as good as hand and that decomposed sweepings were almost useless.

The reason for this was that the sweepings contained much lubricating oil. The experimenters made tests of sweepings from which the oil had been extracted and found that both hand and machine sweepings produced as good results as stable manure, while the decomposed sweepings were not far behind.

The department issues a bulletin warning farmers and gardeners that sweepings from which the oil has not been extracted will eventually impair the productiveness of soil, unless through drainage the oily material is drained off or changed.

The Whale's Song.

Whales are rarely thought of as vocalists, yet according to Miss A. D. Cameron in "The New North," they really have a distinctive song of their own.

A certain Captain Kelly was the first to notice that whales sing. One Sunday, while officers from three whaling ships were "gamming" over their afternoon walrus meat, Kelly started up with "I hear a bowhead!" There was much chaffing about "Kelly's band," but Kelly weighed anchor, and went to find the band-wagon. Every sail followed his, with the result that three whales were bagged.

Among bowheads, this singsong is a call that the leader of the school, as he forces a passage through Bering sea, makes in order to notify those that follow that the straits are clear of ice.

Walruses and seals and all true mammals that have lungs and live in the water have a bark that sounds strange enough as it comes up from hidden depths. Every lookout from the masthead notices that, when one whale is struck, the whole school is "gallied" or stampeded at the very impact of the harpoon; they have heard the death song.

The sound that the bowhead makes is like the long-drawn-out "hoo-hoo-ooo!" of the hoot-owl. A whaler says that the cry begins on E, and may rise to A, B, or even C before slipping back to F again. He assures us that with the humpback the tone is much finer, and sounds across the water like the note from the E string of a violin.

COUNT WEDS; IS ARRESTED

Nobleman and Bride Stop at Police Station on Way to Marriage Supper.

Chicago.—John Drashkovitch Orloff, who says he is a Russian count, passed an anxious hour while friends were hurrying to the home of a municipal court judge to obtain his release after he had been arrested on a charge of larceny. With him was his bride of a few hours. The charge against Orloff was made by W. B. Wenham, representing the Chicago Safe and Merchandise company, 3932 West Lake street, and he accused the count of having failed to pay for a typewriter which he is said to have purchased December 19 last.

Detectives with Wenham served the papers on Orloff a few moments before he and his bride, with a party of friends, were about to leave the home of the bride, 1927 West Adams street, for the Chicago Beach hotel, where they were to have a wedding supper.

The marriage was performed at 3 p. m. in St. Paul's Reformed Episcopal church, South Winchester avenue and West Adams street. The marriage ceremony was read by Bishop Samuel Fallows.

The arrest of Orloff resulted in the postponement of the count's honeymoon trip to an eastern city. The accused count was saved from a cell by Detective Welling, who stood in front of the Clark street police station with him while his friends were signing the bonds. In front of the station also was an automobile in which were the bride and Mrs. L. M. Czar and Miss Violet S. Hallowell, who had acted as bridesmaids at the wedding. Countess Orloff, who before her marriage was Miss Mary Henrietta Sparrow, was nervous during the wait at the police station and at first was unwilling to talk about her husband's arrest. Finally she was persuaded to talk about a woman who her husband had intimated was responsible.

"My wife has been receiving numerous letters from this woman, who has told her I am not a real count," said Orloff. "I cannot reveal her name at the present time."

He admitted having obtained the typewriter, but said he had given the machine to a friend, who had agreed to pay for it.

BUILT BY RULE OF THREE

London.—The Royal Archaeological institute, during its next session at Northampton, will visit one of the quaintest buildings ever erected in England.

The structure was built in 1500 by John Treaham, is symbolical of the Trinity, and everything about it is built in threes. There are three sides, with three gables on each side and three floors with three windows on each face.

Each front is 33 feet long and bears a legend of 33 letters. The chimney is also three-sided.

Our Interests Are Identical

It is an axiom that the prosperity of a railroad is dependent upon the prosperity of the territory it serves; but the prosperity of any state would avail its people little but for the resulting ability of the railroad to provide the needful transportation.

Therefore, The Louisville and Nashville Railroad works in co-operation with the shipper to create and develop business to supply traffic upon which freight charges are earned. Freight charges are earned to enable the Louisville and Nashville to supply transportation from the place of production to the point of consumption. The shipper who appreciates the importance to him of such an arrangement is not only willing but anxious to have the L. & N. make a fair return on its investment so the L. & N. can continue to supply transportation, just as the L. & N. is anxious to have the shipper make a success of his business so the shipper can continue to supply traffic on which freight charges are earned.

With this idea in view The Louisville and Nashville Railroad has recently pledged its credit and prepared to enable the South and North Alabama Railroad to expend a very large amount of money to provide additional facilities to reduce the cost and promote the more expeditious handling of traffic. Extensive improvements will be made in the belief that increased facilities will accelerate development of this fertile territory, to the benefit of both the L. & N. and the people.

Only a prosperous railroad, such as The Louisville and Nashville, would be able to profitably sell its bonds and otherwise provide the needful capital, the expenditure of which within the state of Alabama will be of immense direct benefit to her people. It is, therefore, in accord with both good morals and good business that the L. & N., through economy of operation and a constructive policy, has established its financial responsibility in the money markets of the world, and is in position to contribute to the upbuilding of the territory through which it operates. It is in this spirit of co-operation and mutual development that the officials of the L. & N. request a thoughtful consideration by the citizens of Alabama of the problems now before the people as they relate to the railroad.

Oh, How I Itched!

What long nerve-racking days of constant torture—what sleepless nights of terrible agony—itch—itch—itch, constant itch, until it seemed that I must tear off my very skin—then—

Instant relief—my skin cooled, soothed and healed!

The very first drops of D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema stopped that awful itch instantly; yes, the very moment D.D.D. touched the burning skin the torture ceased. A 25c bottle proves it.

D.D.D. has been known for years as the only absolutely reliable eczema remedy, for it washes away the disease germs and leaves the skin as clear and healthy as that of a child.

All other druggists have D.D.D. Prescription—go to them if you can't come to us—but don't accept some big profit substitute.

But if you come to our store, we are so certain of what D.D.D. will do for you that we offer you a full size bottle on this guarantee:—If you do not find that it takes away the itch AT ONCE, it costs you not a cent.

CLANTON MUNICIPAL ELECTION

On Monday next it is the duty and privilege of the citizens of Clanton to elect a Mayor and five councilmen to conduct the affairs of the town for the ensuing term and much interest is being manifested, although we regret to say not quite as much as is desirable, considering the magnitude of the interests at stake.

On Monday last a meeting of the most influential citizens of the town was held and it was decided to make the following nominations:

For Mayor: Dr. E. A. Matthews or Dr. J. E. Gowan.

For Councilmen: Tipton Mullins, W. H. Sartor, W. I. Mullins, J. T. Cullen and N. S. Johnson. These are gentlemen who favor and will work for a free school and a careful administration of the town's affairs.

With the great progress the town is making it is highly desirable the incoming administration should be both progressive and economical.

CHANCERY COURT.

The fall term of Chancery Court convened in regular session at Clanton on Monday, Chancellor Whitesides presiding, and finished the business of the term the same day. No matters of general or public interest were disposed of.

Col. Sam Will John, of Birmingham, was amongst the visiting attorneys in attendance upon Chancery Court.

J. T. Stewart, Esq., of Birmingham, was a visitor to Clanton on Monday, attending Chancery Court.

MINISTERS' CONFERENCE.

The Ministers' Conference at this church has been called off, there will be an all-day service on Saturday before the 4th Sunday in September. The following program has been arranged:

Mr. Union-Banner, please allow a small space in your paper to a few words. Health of this community is very good except a few cases of whooping cough and fever. John Collins has been very ill for some time hope for their speedy recovery.

Cotton picking is all the go these days and keeps us all busy trying to keep up with it. The cream supper at Mr. J. M. Mims Saturday night was enjoyed by all present.

Prof. J. L. Harris spent Saturday night and Sunday with Mr. George Murrah.

Miss Roberta Robinson was a pleasant visitor of Miss Genie Colvin Saturday and Sunday.

Rev. W. E. Green, Mr. Merritt Green and Mr. Albert Bowen of Birmingham visited Mr. J. D. Colvin Sunday.

The singing at the Chapel Sunday was very good, as the crowd was small. We expect to have Mr. H. M. Eagle and wife with us on. I guess that's all us this is first. Come on you correspondents, let's hear from you. Best wishes to the Union-Banner and its readers.

Jemison, Sept. 9, 1912.

Editor Union-Banner:

I just want to step in and tell how proud I am that we are in favor of progress, for we need it all along the line. Just think of the condition, take our state, see what a fix its finance is in if we don't get reform in some way we are gone and we never will get it out of the old democrat rut.

Just look, Alabama now one million behind, and still some will say stay in our party. I hope that the people will think, for we have tried them long enough. It gets worse instead of better. Now a change is offered, what will you do? Will the people hold to old party spirits and get it by? Now I for one won't do it, for we need help and the platform is wide enough for everybody to stand on. Now, Brother voter, will come say O, I am a democrat, or I am a Republican and can't give up my party. Now that would be nonsense, for we need measures instead of party names. I am glad that men turned as they did and we will turn out in November and show that we are going to help put the progressive movement in effect. Don't be deceived by false reports about this movement as was made last week. Come all you correspondents, make our paper more interesting.

-S. E WALDRUP.

Clanton, Ala., Sept. 10, 1912.

Editor Union-Banner: I have been somewhat surprised at some things I have heard since the mass meeting the 30th. The leading socialists seem to be more than anxious about the republicans putting out a ticket. The mass meeting had hardly adjourned before they were on the streets talking another ticket. I hear there is going to be another convention at Maplesville to put out a ticket, and won't she be a sight? I understand that tickets will be given to those they want to participate, and it is said the only qualifications that will be required are, first, are you a democrat? Second, are you a socialist? Third, are you a postmaster, or do you want to be one?

I think they ought to let it be known that they will charge for admission, and I believe they could get up a good crowd, and the funds could go to help the democrats elect their ticket.

A gentleman up here at Thorsby has been offered the post office if he will help this crowd. I think if they are going to trade on post offices they had better be in a hurry if President Taft is to deliver the goods for his time is out the fourth of next March. Hon. Roosevelt will be behind the counter after then.

I see from the papers that Mr. T. C. Bingham is going to help the good people of Chilton organize, and show them how to elect a ticket. Now, I am informed that Mr. Bingham lives in Montgomery county, and belongs to one of the oldest republican families in the state, and he has made a good showing in Montgomery county. I think there is about forty federal office holders in that county, and that the Republican ticket got thirty-six votes in the last election. Yes, in that county, Mr. Bingham is a power when it comes to getting Republican votes, but it looks like he does more for the Democrats than any one else, and I suppose he will try to do the same kind of work up here. Anyone knows that those that help get out another ticket are only helping the Democrats to elect their ticket.

Now to be honest, there is not a single Republican in this county that has any right to kick, we had a mass meeting, and gave everybody a chance to express themselves about where to put the county ticket, and it was unanimously decided to put the ticket under the Roosevelt emblem.

Let us not be fooled by a few pretended Republicans, and forget the county ticket. Remember how the voice of the people has been hushed and how the will of more than 90 per cent of the voters of this county has been ignored. I think this is of more importance to the voters of this county than who shall be post master. I hope the people will stand shoulder to shoulder as they have in the past, and not be fooled by a few of our enemies.

Respectfully,
WILEY GORE.

BUSINESS HAD TO GO ON

Sam Thought He Had Combination, but Relief for Mandy Was Not in Sight.

A lazy darky who let his wife take in washing without demur had a dream one night, and a policy dream at that. He borrowed money from her to play the combination, and before he left home he stated his conviction. "Mandy," he said, "Ah's goin' up town to play dis combine, what am sho' to come out. When you see me comin' home in a hack yo' break up yo' washtubs." That "combine" didn't come out, and Sam, in great dejection, acquired a lot of gin. Then he was messed up a bit by a dray, and some other darkies hired a hack to take him home. Sam was nearly out, and was breathing heavily when the hack turned a familiar corner, and his wife was standing in the door. With his last ounce of energy he stuck his head out of the window and yelled: "Mandy, guard dem tubs!"

THORSBY.

The public school opened Monday morning with a goodly number of pupils in attendance. The school board, the mayor, Pastor Richards, Pastor Grosper and quite a few parents were also present. The principal, Mr. Hunter, made a very eloquent speech. There were remarks by Pastor Richards, Pastor Grosper and two of the school board. Miss Neely Johnston, a former teacher here, paid the school children a nice compliment. The opening exercises were much enjoyed by all.

Mr. W. B. Tomlin, leaves Monday night for a business trip in Birmingham.

Mr. Hilt, from Birmingham, is here, representing the Fraternal Order of America. He has enough applicants already to organize a lodge, a good many here are going to take the advantage offered in being a charter member. Dr. Wooly is the examining physician.

Last Thursday evening, the Ladies Aid Social was held at the home of Mrs. W. H. Williams, refreshments were served and a social hour was much enjoyed by all.

The High School opens next Tuesday. Many students are expected to arrive this week.

The young ladies' dormitory is undergoing repairs of all kinds. A new bath room is being put in by the Ladies' Guild, fresh paint is being administered and so on.

Last Thursday night Pastor Grosper's young people's bible class and Mrs. Simmontons Young, ladies class joined forces in giving a farewell surprise to Miss Wilmer Berson, who left Friday morning with the family for their new home in Pennsylvania. Mrs. P. H. Villadsen kindly gave the use of her pretty home for the occasion. A large and happy crowd of young people with the teachers, participated in games of various sorts, refreshments were served and at eleven o'clock, the party broke up, wishing Miss Wilmer a happy home in Pennsylvania, and a pleasant journey there. How we shall miss her in Sunday school.

Last Sunday morning and evening the Congregational Church was filled to listen to the sweet songs Mrs. Leonard sung, and the good things she had to tell of the work in the Salvation Army. Mrs. Leonard is a frail creature, but her choice is to live a life of sacrifice and hardship if need be to please her Master. O, that we had more laborers like her.

CROSS ROADS BEAT 10.

Please allow me a few words in your valuable paper. Health of this community is very good at present, excepting some "heart trouble," and a few cases of "love fever,' which we hope will soon be cured. Mrs. E. L. McKinney has been very sick but is improving.

Prof. J. D. Weldon has been staying over with his friend J. Lee Yates and going to singing school. He says he likes this country and his bright smiles and long walk last Sunday proved it.

The young people of this community are very lively these days, but I'm expecting them to look dull when singing school is out and they have to go to picking cotton.

Rev. J. D. Hughes filled his regular appointment at Chestnut Creek Saturday and Sunday. The singing at the church Sunday evening was very good and L. P. was all smiles.

Miss Kate Duncan has been visiting at her uncle's, Mr. E. L. McKinneys, for the past two weeks.

Cheer up folks and look at the bright side of life, remember that every cloud has a silver lining. As time and news is scarce. I guess I'd better skiddoo.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION CALLED.

(Advertisement)

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 5, 1912.

To the Republicans of Chilton county:

It has been authoritatively reported to me that the regularly elected Republican County chairman of Chilton county together with certain members of the County Committee, and certain candidates nominated in the Republican Party Primary of the county as the Republican candidates for county offices to be voted for at the November, 1912, election have renounced their allegiance to the Republican party and have declared their intention of joining the bolting or third term movement known as the Progressive Party.

Now by authority vested in me as Chairman of the Republican State Executive Committee, conferred by resolution of the Republican State Executive Committee unanimously adopted in its meeting of July 25, 1912, I hereby call a delegated county convention of the voters of Chilton county who believe in the principles of the Republican party and who will support its nominees to meet at Maplesville, Saturday on the 4th day of September, 1912, which convention will then and there reorganize the Republican party in said county; elect a new County Executive Committee, select a new chairman and secretary thereof; nominate candidates to be voted for as county officials at the November election, such nominees to be of the Republican party, and to appear under the emblem "Vulcan," the legal and official emblem of the Republican party in Alabama; to select delegates for Chilton county to a Republican District convention to be called for the purpose of nominating a Congressional candidate for the Fourth Congressional district, and such other legal business as may come before the county convention. I hereby designate Ralph Calloway, A. E. Teel, and Henry Fisher, as a committee to arrange for said county convention, arrange and fix the basis of representation of the several voting precincts, giving the number of delegates to each, to hear and determine any contests, secure a hall, appoint doorkeepers, and a temporary chairman and secretary, and give proper publicity to this call.

The justice and reason of this call must be apparent to all thinking men. The Republican party has met in national convention, has adopted its platform and nominated its candidates. Before the national convention any republican had a right to his individual choice for the presidential candidate, after the national convention all true republicans are bound to lay aside the personal preference and support the party, its platform and its candidate. Mr. Roosevelt is not running as an independent Republican, he has openly severed his connection with the Republican party, going to length of even having his name erased as a Republican voter from the registration books of New York, and his followers now openly avow their allegiance to the new party. Any man has a right to support the nominees of the third term party if he sees fit to do so, but in so doing he ceases to be a Republican.

How any voter who has heretofore aligned himself with the Republican party and shared in the general prosperity caused by its administration of national affairs can now consider the abandoning of the party is beyond my comprehension. The issue is perfectly plain. It is between democratic misrule and governmental incompetence, and a continuance of prosperity and sane progress under a republican administration. Mr. Roosevelt's candidacy is nothing but the expression of a personal grievance. The country is not so poverty stricken that its fortunes and future is bound up in any one man. It was not McKinley but the Republican party which restored prosperity in 1896; it was not Roosevelt but the Republican party which continued prosperity in 1904; it was not Taft but the Republican party which retained prosperity in 1908, and today the only party which has a record to present or any assurances for the future is the Republican party. On June the 15th of this year, in the mind of Theodore Roosevelt the Republican party was the only party fit and competent to govern and he then sought to be its chosen servant to administer its policies. Today, the party and the policies remain just as they were three months ago, only Roosevelt has departed.

As I said the real issue is simple and perfectly plain. It is between a party with a record of four years of business, disaster, and a part succeeding it with sixteen years of peace, prosperity and advancement never equalled in the history of the world. Where are you going to stand?

Yours very truly,
POPE M. LONG,
Chairman Republican State Committee.

CHAS. J. ALLISON,
Chairman Republican Campaign Committee.

In accordance with the authority vested in us by the above and for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of said above order, we hereby call a convention of the Republicans of Chilton county, Alabama, to assemble at Maplesville, Chilton county, Alabama, in the school house of said village, at 2 p. m. on Saturday, September 21st, 1912.

The representation in said convention is hereby fixed at two delegates from each precinct of said county.

Monday the sixteenth day of September is hereby designated as a day upon which republicans in their respective precincts shall select said delegates as above provided for; the manner and mode of selecting said delegates shall be left with the Republican voters of their respective precincts.

Dated this the 9th day of September, 1912.

MT. PLEASANT.

Our school closed last Friday with a picnic and public speaking by Judge L. H. Reynolds, and Profs. John J. Mims, P. J. Sessions and others. The program by the pupils was successfully carried out, in fact the whole day was a success and enjoyed by all present. Our school has been a success under the careful management of Prof. John L. Mims as principal and Miss. Beulah Vance as assistant. They leave us with our best wishes and we certainly wish them success in their next place of teaching.

We are glad to say that Miss Bessie Wesson who has been down with the fever some time is improving.

Mrs. Katie Duncan and Mrs. Ruth Scroggins were recent visitors at Mrs. Mary Tompson and Mrs. Cordia Miller.

Mrs. Jim Crawford of Shelby has been visiting her sister Mrs. G. H. Massey.

Mr Ocie Blackman and family were recent visitors at W. J. Blankenship.

Mrs. R. E. L. Ward spent part of last week in Talladega with relatives.

Aunt Julia Oden has just returned from a visit to her brother Mr. Bart Oden.

Prof. Howard Foshee of Thorsby visited in this community last week.

Mr. Bart Oden spent Monday night at Mr. W. H. Foshee's.

Mrs. Silas Kelley spent part of last week with her son J. E. Kelley.

Miss Katie Duncan is spending the week with relatives near Coopers.

THE MARTIN CASE.

A large crowd gathered at Clanton Tuesday at the preliminary trial of Ed Martin, charged with the killing of Deputy Sheriff Charley Cox on August 30th. About forty witnesses were in attendance, and a pathetic incident was the appearance of the young widow of Mr. Cox, who was overcome by weeping and had to be removed from the court.

The State was represented by F. L. Tate, solicitor for the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, Tipton Mullins, Middleton and Reynolds and Sam A. Latham; and the defendant by Thos. A. Curry and A. C. Smith.

The trial was held before Judge Deason, eighteen witnesses being summoned for the State and Twenty-one for the defense. The principal witnesses for the State were T. Payton, who was present at the time of the shooting, and Dr. P. I. Hopkins. For the defense P. T. Hinkle, Robert Popwell and W. A. Candler were the chief witnesses examined.

The case was heard until late Tuesday night and on Wednesday morning it was adjourned until next Saturday week, 21st inst.

On Saturday last the Red Men held their annual picnic and served an elaborate barbecue at the grounds of the Masonic Lodge at Clanton. Just before noon they met at their lodge rooms and headed by the fine military band from Thorsby marched in parade through the streets of Clanton to the grounds, where the barbecue held sway.

The principal speakers were Messrs. Andrews, Gorman and Friedman, all of Birmingham, and a pleasant time was spent.

SPLENDID FREE SHOWS

There was once an adage that you could not eat your cake and keep it too, but that has been annihilated by the managers of the Alabama State Exposition to be held in Montgomery Oct. 16th to 26th inclusive by the long list of free attractions they are to furnish Exposition visitors.

All the fun in the world is to be had on this occasion and the sight seer is to be allowd to keep his money in his own wallet if he so chooses.

Aeroplane flights and motorcycle races will be interspersed with other numbers, making up one of the most entertaining collections of free acts ever offered visitors at an Exposition in the South

CARE OF STOCK

AT ALABAMA STATE FAIR, BIRMINGHAM.

The care of all animals sent to the Alabama State Fair to be held from October 3 to 12, will be one of the greatest features of the Fair. Not only, is it encouraging owners of blooded animals to send their stock to the Fair but it is attracting attention of thousands of farmers throughout the state to come to the Fair and see these things put into practice.

In the first place, the grounds on which the animals, cattle, hogs, horses, sheep and in fact every thing with four feet, have been thoroughly disinfected by Dr. Sid Gilt, a government expert and pronounced in a perfect condition

Hogs will be inoculated with the serum prepared and endorsed by the federal government for the prevention of cholera among hogs. This will be done free of charge by Superintendent Miles C. Allgood, who is well known throughout the state. All cattle will be dipped in a new and up-to-date dipping. Not only will all the cattle sent to the Fair be dipped but there will be dipping every day to show those who come to the Fair just how it is done. The vat is conveniently located so all can see it.

DROUGHT DAMAGES COTTON SERIOUSLY

THIS THE REPORT THAT COMES FROM ALL PARTS OF ALABAMA.

ABOUT 30 PER CENT. OPEN

Counties Reporting Quality Say Grades Are Off, Much Lower Than Last Season.

Montgomery.—From all parts of Alabama it is stated that the cotton crop is being seriously damaged by the present drought.

In the opinion of the farmers it seems that not more than 75 per cent of last year's crops can be made, many saying that it will be even less.

In the southwestern part of Alabama reports are to the effect that the boll weevil damage this year is not so great as last season, but a destructive worm is in evidence that will make up for the damage the boll weevil is not doing this year.

Throughout many sections, land preparation was delayed this spring by the advent of a prolonged rainy season. Cotton in such sections is not expected to make much of a showing, for the drought is causing the squares and small bolls to fall; the caterpillar has done much damage and altogether the farmers in such sections are pessimistic about their makings this season.

In sections where the spring weather was favorable, the present drought is not so severely felt, for the made bolls are opening readily and picking is going steadily forward, some towns already having received several hundred bales.

Judging from reports, the crop, as a whole for this State, is more than 30 per cent open and picking is going on throughout Alabama.

Ginneries have been started up and many of them are running to capacity, though the main bulk of the cotton is not looked for before October.

Many reports state the tendency to hold cotton is not at all in evidence, the planters readily selling at present quotations, but some of them are just as willing to put their bales away for a while.

Counties that have mentioned cotton quality, say the grade is off, decidedly lower than last season in some sections. There is hardly an optimistic report in the whole state, and even those who say the crop is fairly good contend that weather conditions are rapidly carrying the crop backward.

Hot, dry weather is mainly held responsible for the present deterioration some saying that should the drought continue the crop this year will be exceptionally small and of poor quality.

In the main, it is said that the corn crop will be good and attention to this food staple is growing season by season. Some counties report that there will be little or no corn buying from the West at all this year.

Many planters are said to be making plans for large oat crops and this grain, like corn, is rapidly demanding more and more attention.

The cotton movement is now sturdy and day after day sees the number of bales shipped increasing. The warehouses have livened up and are talking on a cool weather atmospher of business and are doing a lot of it.

The main subject of discussion these days is the drought, and all contend that if it continues as has been the case for the last ten to fifteen days the effect will be far reaching in general damage.

Much of the cotton planting was kept back because of the wet weather at preparation time, and now the more or less young plants are having a lot of trouble holding their fruit. The outlook is not at all bright.

That the drought feature of the situation is very much in mind throughout the state can easily be noted from the way each county report starts with a basing of judgment on the weather conditions. It is the first thing in the minds of all planters.

Liquor Dealers Register Products.

Montgomery.—Liquor dealers are the first to comply with the State law which requires registration in the pure food bureau of all foods, drugs or drinks put up within the State. The bureau officials are endeavoring to impress on all manufacturers that the law is not to be laughed at nor neglected, but that registration must be made by October 1st.

In answer to the circulars of the department, samples were sent of five brands of liquor, mostly corn whiskey and gin, to be registered.

Fish Rates Enjoined.

Montgomery.—The Alabama Railroad Commission has been enjoined from enforcement of its rates on fish shipments from points within the State. The order was issued by Federal Judge W. I. Grubb, of Birmingham, acting in the absence of Judge Thomas G. Jones, in the case of the Southern Express Company, against Charles Henderson, Leon McCord and Frank N. Julian, Commissioners. The present rates are held in abeyance until further order by the court.

STATE POLITICS WARMING UP.

Prediction Made That Several Well Known Men Will Run For Governor.

Montgomery.—As a result of the political development of the past week it appears that Ex-Governor Comer will make the race for the gubernatorial nomination and that his opponents will be Waltr D. Seed and either W. D. Jelks or Sydney J. Bowie, and that the race for the senate will be run by Joseph F. Johnston and Richmond P. Hobson.

In view of recent statemnts of Ex-Governor Comer it is believed that he is desirous of another term in the governor's chair.

Overtures have been made to Ex-Governor Jelks in an effort to get him again to enter a campaign for governor and it is certain, also, that Mr. Bowie's friends have been endeavoring to bring about his announcement.

However neither of these gentlemen have so far committed themselves.

Congressman Clayton, since returning to Alabama, has said nothing in reference to his reported intention of making the race for the Senate and while during the democratic convention he admitted that he was giving the proposition consideration, his friends believe that he will not enter, but will continue to serve the people of the Third district in his present capacity of congressman.

John W. Abercrombie, congressman at large-elect, was quoted during the past week as being less certain than heretofore that he will oppose Senator Johnston.

In a nutshell, Dr. Abercrombie declares that his candidacy depends on whether or not the legislature in extraordinary session redistricts the state.

The consensus of opinion is, that Congressman Clayton and Dr. Abercrombie will not enter, and the race will be one between Johnston and Hobson.

Judge W. W. Bradon of Tuscaloosa, has issued a statement to the effect that he will not enter the scramble for the congressional seat which will be vacated when Congressman Hobson enters the fight for the Senate.

The campaign for the constitutional amendment providing means of escape for Jefferson county from the fee system is under way. Hon. Walker Percy will conduct the campaign throughout the state. Th campaign will be waged vigorously.

M'CALL ASKS INFORMATION.

State is Making Earnest Effort to Recover School Land.

Montgomery.—Following the campaign recently inaugurated to recover to the use of the State all sixteenth section school lands, and their values in the shape of mineral or timber, C. E. McCall, State Examiner of Public Accounts, sent out to all County Superintendents of Education and Probate Judges a letter requesting them to furnish all information obtainable concerning the sale, rental, or other disposition of sixteenth section land or its resource.

Already appeal has gone out to the general public, through letters to W. J. Martin, State Land Agent, and H. J. Willingham, Superintendnt of Education, requesting information regarding any disposition of school lands. The campaign by both departments has been waged earnestly. A history of the situation is: In the original survey of the State, one-sixteenth of the public lands was set aside for the use of the public schools. Through the neglect of county officials, through ignorance of the laws concerning the disposition of the lands, and sometimes through intentional illegal sales or leases, many of the sections have passed into the hands of private citizens, and much of the valuable timber and mineral resources have been taken away, to the loss of the educational fund of the State.

Cotton Exchange Explains Attitude.

Montgomery. — Members of the Montgomery cotton exchange have resented statements that the board was organized to prevent the sale of cotton on Montgomery streets. They declare that the exchange was organized for the purpose of standardizing the cotton traffic, to establish a representative body, to fix reliable daily quotations for the spot trade. The exchange says it has no part whatever in the fight to prevnt the sale of cotton on Court square.

Gipson Granted Parole.

Montmogery.—John D. Gipson, of Colbert county, a convict in the State prison at Speigners, was granted a parole Monday by Governor O'Neal, conditioned on future good behavior. Gipson was sent up by the Colbert County Circuit Court in 1911, on a two year sentence for assault with intent to murder.

Gadsden.—Announcement is made that a field agent of the Southern Railway's farm improvement department will be stationed at Attalla.

Teachers Meet in Two Counties.

Montgomery.—Teachers' institutes are being held this week in only two counties of the state, Jefferson and Dallas. Each of these institutes is largely attended, particularly Jefferson county institute, which is being held in Birmingham. The Dallas county institute is being held at Selma.

On the week following institutes will be held at Mobile, Montgomery and Carrollton, the two former being white institutes, and the latter being for Pickens county.

AMERICANS LIVES IN DEADLY PERIL

FIVE HUNDRED AMERICANS ARE COOPED UP IN TOWN OF CANANEA.

REBELS BURN SIX BRIDGES

United States Government Sends Arms From Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

Naco, Ariz.—Mexican rebels cut all traffic and communication between here and Cananea, Sonora, Mexico, where about five hundred Americans reside.

Shortly afterward a passenger train arrived here, carrying five hundred rifles and 150,000 rounds of ammunition sent by the United States government from the arsenal at Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Texas, to arm the American residents in Cananea.

The rebels cut the railway in an attempt to prevent the shipment of arms reaching the Americans at Cananea. Six bridges were burned.

Care had been taken to conceal the identity of the shipment of arms, but news that the Americans at Cananea had requested Washington authorities to send them arms for self-protection, and that the request had been granted, is believed to have become known among the rebel chiefs in this vicinity.

Not only are American lives believed to be in danger as a result of operations by the rebels, but mines must close down for lack of fuel within a short time,

Cananea is one of the most extensive copper mining centers in the world, and the Cananea Copper company is the richest corporation of its kind in Mexico. The railway destroyed by rebels runs from the American border to Cananea, and is a part of the Southern Pacific of Mexico.

In Cananea are about five hundred American men and about fifty American women. About one hundred of these are American cowboys from the surrounding ranches. Recent threats of rebel leaders to attack Cananea are taken seriously here.

MARINES HOLD THE CAPITAL

Eight Hundred Marines Arrive in Managua, Nicaragua.

Managua, Nicaragua.—The American marines from Philadelphia and bluejackets from the cruiser Colorado have arrived here. There are now 800 marines and bluejackets in Managua and about the same number have headquarters at Leon.

Detachments of marines and bluejackets were left to guard the important railroad towns and bridges on the road from Corinto to Managua and marines will be sent to Masaya and Granada to reopen the railroad at these points.

Panama.—News of an important battle in Nicaragua was received by Dr. Marcase Velasquez, the Panaman minister to that country. The message, which comes from the Nicaraguan minister of finance, Pedro Rafael Cuedra, says that the government forces captured Pagaya and Saratoga, important positions dominating the City of Masaya, which is held by the insurgents. The fighting was severe and many lives were lost but the exact number of casualties is not stated.

San Juan Del Sur, Nicaragua.—The government troops have occupied the town of Catarina, on the Heights of Pagaya. Many casualties resulted from the engagement. The clergy of Granada have issued an appeal for quick relief as the people of that city are starving.

United States Forces New Trial.

Washington. — Following strong representations from the state department, a new trial has been granted W. C. Nichols, the American citizen recently sentenced to eight years' imprisonment for killing the desperado, Cevallos, whom he had been employed to arrest. After Nichols' conviction, recently, American Consul Miller, at Tampico, reported to the state department that the trial had been conducted in violation of all the rules of Mexican justice.

Mysterious Disease Kills Horses.

Topeka, Kan.—A conference of all the veterinarians, pathologists and bacteriologists now treating horses afflicted with the mysterious disease that is killing hundreds of animals in Kansas was called by Governor Stubbs and J. H. Mercer, state live stock sanitary commissioner, who issued the summons. It is hoped to organize for a systematic fight on the plague. Dr. R. Sophian, a meningitis expert, told Governor Stubbs that the disease affecting the horses was dissimilar to meningitis.

50,000 Deadly Ticks.

Washington.—A package more deadly than dynamite was delivered to the United States hygienic laboratory by a special messenger who mopped his brow with evident relief when he got a receipt for it. The package contained 50,000 ticks infected with the deadly Rocky Mountain spotted fever, enough to wipe out the population of the nation's capital should they be liberated from the glass tubes. The fever carriers were sent by Surgeon P. H. MacMullin.

DR. RUPERT BLUE

Surgeon General Blue of the Marine hospital service is conducting the campaign against the threatened invasion of this country by the bubonic plague.

BANDIT HOLDS UP TRAIN

LOUISVILLE AND NASHVILLE PASSENGER HELD UP JUST OUT OF NEW ORLEANS.

Robber Was Knocked in the Head by the Engineer and Fatally Injured.

New Orleans.—A lone train bandit held up the northbound express of the Louisville and Nashville railroad near Michaud, twelve miles from here, looted the mail car, robbed the passengers in five Pullmans and a club car, and then, just as he was about to leave the tender, was struck over the head with a brass torch by Engineer Baer and captured. He was taken to Bay St. Louis and may die. The booty, except for one mail bag thrown from the car, was recovered and returned. The bandit would give no name.

The Louisville and Nashville Express that left here was about two and a half miles from Michaud, a small station in the swamps, when the bandit appeared on the tender, covered Engineer Baer and the fireman with a revolver and forced them to stop the train. He then drove them ahead of him into the mail car. There he made the negro porter throw one mail bag off, secured some registered letters and continued his march into the Pullman.

One after another he went through the cars, and, while the passengers held up their hands and the engineer and fireman preceded him, he took his toll from the travelers and put it into a small valise. He took nothing but money. After securing his loot, the lone bandit drove the engineer and fireman back to the tender, and made them again start the train.

His plan was to have them drop him off after they left the swamps, but Engineer Baer, watching his opportunity caught him off his guard and knocked him senseless with a heavy brass torch.

CANALS STANDARD DEPTH

Along Atlantic Seaboard, Urged at Waterways Meet.

New London, Conn.—The standardization in depth of all canals along the Atlantic seaboard was advocated, amid much enthusiasm on the part of the delegates by Congressman John H. Small of North Carolina in his address to the Atlantic Deep Waterways convention at its fifth annual convention.

Mr. Small had been introduced as the apostle of deeper waterways and followed Charles Elmer Smith, secretary of the Philadelphia builders' exchange, who read the report of Gen. W. H. Bixby, chief of engineers, in the United States, in which a favorable report had been made for a canal twelve feet deep from Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet, N. C., at a cost of $5,000,000.

Thirty Girls Leaped to Safety.

Chicago.—Thirty girls were forced to leap out of second story windows to escape death when an explosion caused by benzine vapor wrecked a building occupied by a dyeing and cleaning establishment. Rudolph Spinner, foreman of the establishment, was crushed to death. His body was dug out of the ruins by firemen. One girl who jumped out of a window was picked up unconscious and with both legs fractured. Others in rushing to reach the stairways were knocked down.

Experiment Station Burned.

Griffin, Ga.—Lightning striking the big barn at the Georgia Experiment Station, at Experiment, near here, started a fire which destroyed the entire plant, with the exception of the residences. Blown by a high wind, the flames rapidly spread from the barn to the other buildings, and, when the conflagration was finally checked, about two hours and a half after it had wiped out the gump house, the carpenter shop, the packing house and the silo. Several head of cattle were burned also.

STRAUS CHOSEN BY PROGRESSIVES

UNANIMOUSLY ACCLAIMED NOMINEE BY PROGRESSIVE PARTY.

DRAMATIC SCENES ENACTED

Former Cabinet Member, While Acting as Chairman, Placed in Nomination.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Oscar S. Straus, former secretary of commerce and labor, in the cabinet of President Roosevelt, was unanimously acclaimed the nominee for governor by the Progressive party in a stampeded convention under circumstances not only unexpected, but dramatic.

The former cabinet member, acting as the convention's permanent chairman, was about to entertain a motion from former Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff to expedite the roll call on the names of State Chairman William H. Hotchkiss and Comptroller William A. Prendergast of New York, when a delegate from New York county leaped to his chair and demanded to be heard.

"It's 'Suspender Jack' McGee," cried a voice from the gallery. Chairman Straus looked puzzled. McGee, who got his name in the Indian country by riding a broncho into camp, with suspenders used as reins, moved resolutely toward the platform.

"They say I'm crazy, but I know what I am doing," he cried, as he swung up the platform steps.

McGee, a flaming bandanna around his neck and his coat blazing with badges, tossed his rough rider hat on the floor and demanded the right to make a nomination.

"Whom do you wish to nominate?" asked Chairman Straus, but McGee gave ony a meaningless shake of the head. Delegates cried: "Put him out!" But McGee stuck to his purpose.

Delegates and spectators booed and jeered as he began to speak. There was a general laugh when he cried:

"I'll name a man, the mention of whose name will bring tears of sympathy to the eyes of almost every man and woman in the civilized land.'

He paised a moment and then cried: "I nominate the illustrious and honorable Oscar S. Straus."

The delegates seemed stunned. Then a few of them cheered. McGee kept on with his speech and the first few cheers, at first from a half dozen delegates, gradually grew into a pandemonium that swept the convention hall. Standards were wrenched from their supports and delegates, yelling and cheering for Chairman Straus, paraded the aisles, turning the convention into a bedlam.

Chairman Straus at first shook his head deprecatingly. He turned to his friends and remarked: 'This must not be. I cannot accept." Chairman Hotchkiss rushed to the platform. Placing his hands on Mr. Straus' shoulders, he said: "You must accept; you must accept; all the delegates are for you."

Scores of delegates pressed forward to urge Mr. Straus to make the decision. Then Mr. Hotchkiss burst from the group that surrounded Mr Straus and held up before the crush of excited delegates a sheet of yellow paper on which was written: "He accepts."

U. S. SOLDIERS FIGHT REBELS

15 Troopers Hold Back 25 Raiders, Killing Five and Wounding One.

Douglas, Ariz.—Mexican rebels crossed the boundary and were engaged by United States soldiers on the Lang ranch, 50 miles east of Douglas, according to a report received here.

Fourteen America ntroopers held back 25 rebels, killing five and wounding one of the Mexicans, it is reported. The rebels are believed to be in command of Inez Salazar, whose men also engaged American soldiers below Hachita, N. M., farther to the east.

Airships Claim Two Victims.

Stevanage, England.—Two more British army officers lost their lives while flying. Captain Patrick Hamilton had taken Lieutenant Stewart with him as a passenger in his biplane. The two officers had flown for a considerable time when one of the wings of the aeroplane collapsed. The machine fell to the ground from an altitude of 250 feet and was destroyed. The bodies of the two officers were found in the wreck. Captain Hamilton had obtained his pilot's certificate only on March 15.

Massachusetts Wins Trophy Match.

Rifle Range, Seagirt, N. J.—The Dryden trophy match, regarded as the most important event of the Seagirt shooting tournament, was won by Massachusetts with a score of 1,104 out of a possible 1,200. The winner receives the $4,000 trophy, presented by the late United States Senator Dryden of New Jersey, and $150 in cash. Second prize, $100, was captured by the District of Columbia, which scored 1,086, and third prize by Maryland, score 1,084. New York scored 1,082 and finished fourth.

STATE BRIEFS.

Montgomery.—An anonymous letter has been received by Mrs. C. Walter Jones, threatening her life if she does not stop the fight in behalf of her husband, who is sentenced to die for the murder of Sloan Rowan.

Tuskegee.—The public roads in all sections of Macon county are being put in excellent shape for the heavy fall traffic sets in. A road is also being constructed between city and Chehaw, the junction of the Western railway.

Auburn.—The matriculation of the forty-first session of the Polytechnic institute progresses daily and old and new students arriving on every train. Fourteen and one foreign country are represented.

Montgomery.—Asserting a wish to reform their lives and redeem themselves from "the life of degradation" to which they have fallen, convicts of the state farm at Wetumpka have organized themselves into "The Alabama State Reform League," elected officers and drawn up rules for their guidance.

Ashville.—Gayle Ford, cashier of the Bank of Dixon Springs, Dixon Springs, Tenn., who killed himself, was the founder of the Ashville Savings bank. He also caused the incorporation of about 20 institutions of this kind in Tennessee and several in this state.

Huntsville.—The special criminal term of the law and equity court which has been held here during the last four and one-half weeks by Judge James H. Ballentine, adjourned. A majority of the 350 criminal cases that were on the docket when convened were disposed of.

Marion.—Bids opened for the construction of sevral miles of additional highways under the recent bond issue. The most important road will be that leading to Borrough's bridge, which will be partly constructed by the state appropriation. The town of Marion is spending a thousand dollars on the street leading to this road, which is regarded as the most important of all roads radiating from Marion.

Montgomery. — Sums aggregating nearly $1,000 were due the state and county by officials of Cleburne county, according to Frank V. Evans, examiner of public accounts, in a report submitted to Judge Merrill, of the seventh judicial circuit, and filed in the office of Governor O'Neal. The Sums are due as the result of discrepancies of a technical nature, and of legal charges under the law recently interpreted by the courts and by the attorney general, says the examiner in his report.

Montgomery.—Discrepancies to the amount of nearly $1,000 were found in the books, accounts and vouchers of officials of Cleburne county, according to a report submitted to Judge Merrill, judge of the Seventh circuit by Frank V. Evans, examiner of public accounts. A copy of the office of Governor O'Neal. Mr. Evans' report has been filed. The discrepancies found by the examiner were of a technical nature, and the language of Mr. Evans, "charges made under the law as interpreted by the courts and by the attorney general."

Montgomery. — The [illegible] members of the committee [illegible] rangements for an Alabama Centennial Exposition in 1919 at the capitol decided to call a meeting of the whole committee at Montgomery one day during the week in October. The action of the committee in calling the meeting places them on record as favoring Montgomery as the site for the exposition. During the meeting discussion arose as to the relative merits of Birmingham and Montgomery for the meeting of the committee on arrangements next month. Chairman Owen finally decided on Montgomery.

Birmingham.—Sylacauga gets a $700,000 cotton mill to be erected by ex-Gov. B. B. Comer and associates. At a meeting held here at which the reports of several places were received Sylacauga was decided upon. With that decision ended a very warm and spirited campaign, that has been on for the location of the mill.

The company has acquired 230 acres of land in Sylacauga on which the mill will be located as well as the houses for the employes.

The plant, while not the largest in the state, will be the most modern, perhaps, inasmuch as a great many new features will be introduced in the operations.

Tuskegee.—J. B. Myhand, of Society Hill beat, holds the record so far for fine corn in this section. He brought to town five ears averaging eighteen inches in length and beautifully matured in every respect.

Birmingham.—While engaged in mantling the Peoples Telephone company cable, Charles Simms, a lineman for the Southern Bell Telephone company, was electrocuted near Ovenville station. Twenty-three hundred volts of electricity struck the lineman above the heart, causing instant death.

Bitterness in an Epitaph.

Mason and Dixon's line is fast becoming a memory, but here and there are to be found evidences of the once bitter hatred which prevailed in the days of the Civil war.

George W. Kerdoliff, who before entering the insurance business spent much time in the south, tells this story of an epitaph rudely carved on a block of sandstone yet to be seen in a Louisiana parish:

When the slogan of the south was 'On to Washington," and the youth of the Confederacy had shouldered their muskets for the front, leaving only the older folks and women and children at home, a band of Union soldiers came into Louisiana. Sighting the enemy, the aged men, assisted by the women, gathered together their scant supply of firearms and planned resistance. As the Federal forces came up a narrow lane, the southerners opened fire with such deadly effect that the invaders retreated, leaving one of their number dead upon the field of battle.

The victors buried the fallen foe, and over his grave, to this day, one may read the roughly chiseled epitaph: "The Yankee bands with bloody hands came southward to divide our lands. This lonely and deserted spot is all this —— old Yankee got."—Kansas City Journal.

DIZZINESS—DO YOU HAVE IT?

This is caused by the bile being reabsorbed into the circulation. To get rid of this trouble it is necessary to use a good liver medicine to eliminate the surplus bile from the system. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator either liquid or powders does this to perfection. Use it for all bilious troubles and you will soon feel better. Accept no substitute, but insist on having the genuine St. Joseph's Liver Regulator. Druggists and dealers sell it liquid, 50 cents a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents about five doses for a dollar.

REWARD FOR TENANT

Owner of House Offers $50 for an Occupant.

Landlord Also Will Give Free Rent to Negro Who Promises to Make "Haunted" Building His Residence.

Kent, Conn.—"Fifty dollars cash bonus and two months' rent free to anybody who will live not less than two months in this house."

Such is the sign which Ezra Blake, wealthy land owner, has put up on one of his houses in the negro quarter near here.

Among negroes the house is reputed "haunted." Until a month ago it was a perfectly self-respecting house, never known to have any spiritual visitors. But the last tenants, a couple named Jackson, after living in it for five years, had a ghostly visitor one night, and since then Mr. Blake has been unable to rent the house.

The Jacksons are considered truthful people. At any rate, their neighbors believe them. Mrs. Jackson declares that a ghost chased her up the back stairs and Mr. Jackson corroborates her.

Mr. Jackson was first to hear queer noises and he aroused his wife Josephine.

"Josephine," he called to her, "thar's suah an awful queer soun' in de cellar!"

Josephine listened, and sure enough, she heard low moaning. Jackson said he'd investigate this matter thoroughly."

"Josephine," he said, without a tremor, 'you go down in the cellar and see wha' fo' that noise is. Ef you need any help, why jes' call me, that's all, jes' call me."

Josephine demurred, but Mr. Jackson was firm, so Josephine went downstairs.

He didn't have long to wait. Josephine came flying back, shrieking: "Mah gracious! It's arter me!"

Mr. Jackson didn't wait to see what "it" was, but sprang through the window to the porch roof and slid down a post to the ground. The last Josephine saw of him he was sprinting up the road.

Now, Mr. Jackson is very devoted to his wife, and he'd have given $5,000, if he had it, so he said afterwards, to have had that ghost right then. What he would have done to it would have been a-plenty.

As it was he hoofed it right along to his neighbors and told his story.

Mr. Jackson and his neighbors returned to the house to rescue Josephine, but when they reached the house her shrieks had ceased.

Presently young Mose Johnson espied a filmy white figure flitting past the upstairs window. He let fly an apple. It hit the white robed figure square in the face. The head was poked out of the window.

It sounded like the voice of Josephine. And, in fact, as Mose did a quickstep up the road Josephine darted down the back stairs.

Nothing could induce Josephine to return, though her husband hinted to her that her attire was not quite the thing for the street. The couple spent the rest of the night at Neighbor Webster's house down the road.

Since then not a colored person has crossed the threshold of the "haunted house."

Mr. Blake recently spent considerable money repairing the place and he says he does not propose to be "robbed of his house by a superstitious prejudice."

BAR ALL STOCKINGLESS GIRLS

Atlantic City Rules Bathers Must Cover Legs While Walking Around Beach.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Feminine "calves" unprotected by stockings are no longer to be seen along the beach. Stockingless maids went under the ban by order of Dr. John T. Beckwith, chief of the beach patrol, acting under direct orders from William Bartlett, director of the department of public safety.

Shapely damsels, not content with abbreviated bathing garments, started a bare leg fad some weeks ago. Since then there has been a general move by athletic girls to follow suit. Director Bartlett was shocked when he sighted several fine specimens drifting about the strand today and the ukase followed.

Now the girls are protesting that the men should be treated likewise.

MRS. BELMONT IS MARKETER

Society Woman Does This as a Protest Against Petty Graft of Employees.

Newport, R. I.—Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont is doing her own marketing this summer as a protest against a system of petty graft, which she says has become well-nigh universal in the households of the wealthy summer colonists here.

"This system of graft, by which employees profit at the expense of employers, is all wrong," says Mrs. Belmont. "We pay our aids good wages, for which they are expected to do a certain service. It is certainly unfair for them to expect to make a large sum of money on commissions that are bound to come out of the pockets of their employers."

CITY POLICE RULE

Chicago Alderman Tells of Mounted Squads.

Declares Corner Bluecoats in New York Are Without Whistles and Little Attention Is Paid to Their Authority.

Chicago.—Chicago's mounted police squad and the crossing policemen guarding the street corners in the business district show up well in comparison with the police of other cities, according to Alderman Henry D. Capitain, who has just returned from a trip through New York, Philadelphia and Boston.

"After I have seen the way other large cities handle their crowds, I must say Chicago is far ahead of them, and our policemen deserve great credit," he said.

"From the observations I made in the great cities visited in the east I have come to the conclusion that mounted police used to guard traffic in congested districts have proved a success. Chicago was right in adopting this plan, and although other cities have been slow to follow, as all of the cities we visited rely entirely on men on foot to guide traffic, I think they will fall in line sooner or later.

While unsparing in his words of praise of the work accomplished by the local mounted police, the city father divided honors equally with the crossing bluecoat who blows the whistle which starts the cars, automobiles, wagons and crowds moving in one direction, and said neither overlap the other, but augments the other's efficiency.

"I was surprised to see," the alderman continued, "that in a city as large as New York the corner policeman was not provided with a whistle as a figure of authority for the traffic to recognize. Nor in any of the other cities visited have they solved this important problem by the use of a whistle.

"In New York, for instance, the policeman starts the traffic by an arm motion, which is so inadequate that it is reflected in the little attention the public pays to him.

"In Boston some of the streets are so narrow that frequently one is used as an avenue for traffic going in one direction, while an entirely different street has to be used by the traffic going in the opposite direction. Some of these streets are only wide enough to admit the passage of a single wagon.

"Particularly was I on the lookout for the way automobile regulations were enforced in other cities. Chicago is ahead of New York in this respect, too, I think. There they do not seem to regulate them as well as here. In fact, it seemed to me that an automobile was especially favored by the policemen, as I witnessed them running in and out in all directions, some at high speed that would call for an immediate arrest here, and the New York police failed to act.

"The chauffeurs and owners running cars seem to have no regard, in my opinion, for the rights of pedestrians. Actually, I saw more narrow escapes through collisions in one day in New York than I would see here in two weeks."

WE WIN BY FOREIGN BLOOD

So Says Ex-Oxford Athlete Who Wants England to Copy the Plan of Sweden.

W. Beach Thomas, an Oxford graduate and former athlete, in reviewing the Olympic games in the Daily Mail says: "One can understand American supremacy. The winners are mostly Englishmen, Scotchmen, or, above all, Irishmen, at one remove from the old country. One conspicuous victory was won by an ex-Swede.

"A vast population, recruited by the best red blood, as the Americans boast, from virile Europe, a population specialistically devoted to the narrowest form of athletics and possessed almost of a mania for competition, is likely to produce a fine team. It did produce an incomparable team. The inclusion of Indians, Hawaiians and one Anglo-Russian further added to the total of marks.

"The Swedes are a better standard of comparison. Their athletes are a delight to the eyes. They were none of them specialists, but were all gymnasts in a wide sense, as well as athletes in a wide sense. The nation has used the Olympic games as a test of the physical training in which the whole nation has been brought up. By a quiet, methodical and really national movement they have vastly increased the nation's virility. The people at large can drill, row, swim, run, throw and play.

"The question for England is whether we cannot direct our national talent for athletics so that our teams may at least have some esprit du corps, in which the defeated Olympic team was grievously deficient, and so that athletic skill with a chance of representing the nation may become a really healthy ambition among the rich and poor in town and village. Such an ideal is realized already in Sweden, Denmark and Finland, and is being discussed in France and Germany."

Substitute Silver.

When the silver was rounded up at the end of the day's work the master of the pantry sorted out eleven spoons engraved with the names of other restaurants and hotels.

"And that is getting off pretty well," said he. "These were left by customers who swiped some of our own silver. Waiters have become so expert at counting at just one glance the pieces of silver they remove from a table that the average pilferer is ashamed to secrete a fork or spoon unless he has something to replace it with. Eyes sharp enough to take in the number of pieces cannot read names and monograms at arm's length, so the substitute is pretty sure to prevent detection. Souvenir fiends who go to big restaurants with the intention of carting off a part of the silver have got smart enough to leave other spoons that they have got tired of in its place to fool the waiter."

Mrs. J. N. Hill, Homer, Ga., has used Foley's Honey and Tar Compound for years, and says she always recommend it to her friends. It never fails to cure our coughs and colds and prevents croup. We have five children and always give them Foley's Honey and Tar Compound for a cold, and they are all soon well. We would not be without it in our house." Upchurch Drug Co.

HALL OF FAME IN FRISCO

Native Sons and Daughters of California Will Be Represented in Art Glass.

San Francisco.—San Francisco, like New York, is to have a Hall of Fame. Therein the twenty native sons and daughters of California, who have done most to reflect glory on their state, are to be glorified in art glass and sculpture.

The temple is being erected by the Native Sons' organization. In the main hall are twenty oval frames, garlanded with laurel wreaths. In each will be placed the art glass effigy of one who has helped make history in California.

Three daughters of the state, Gertrude Atherton, Sybil Sanderson and Mary Anderson, have been selected for the honor. The public is invited to name the following seventeen. On the walls will be placed portraits of many, who, though not natives of California, have been identified with the state.

Trust Father.

"Well, what do you think of things?" inquired father as the 'bus drove away from the station.

"This scenery ain't what I expected," complained mother.

"I don't believe that mountain is half as high as the booklet claimed," declared sister.

"That sunset ain't up to the standard," was brother's comment.

"Go slow, folks," counseled father. "If the meals and the beds come up to the booklet, we won't kick."

Constipation, if Neglected, Causes Serious Illness

Many cases of typhoid fever, appendicitis and other severe diseases are traceable to prolonged clogging of the bowels. Regarding the effects of constipation, C. E. Ayers, 6 Sabin St., Montpelier, Vt., says:

"I was afflicted with constipation and biliousness for years, and at times became so bad I would become unconscious. I have been found in that condition many times. Physicians did not seem to be able to do me any good. I would become weak and for days at a time could do no work. Not long ago I got a box of Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets, and after using them found I had never tried anything that acted in such a mild and effective manner. I believe I have at last found the remedy that suits my case."

Thousands of people are sufferers from habitual constipation and while possibly realizing something of the danger of this condition, yet neglect too long to employ proper curative measures until serious illness often results. The advice of all physicians is, "keep your bowels clean," and it's good advice.

Dr. Miles' Laxative Tablets are sold by all druggists, at 25 cents a box containing 25 doses. If not found satisfactory, your money is returned.

As was expected there is some difference of opinion in the county, and the large meeting at Clanton which formed the Progressive Party has failed to convince some few of the members of the Republican party that that organization has about run its course, and elsewhere in this issue will be found a call for a convention to be held at Maplesville which can hardly expect to accomplish any good either for themselves or for the county.

The Board of Registers of Chilton County having completed the round of the county, and having some little time to spare, have announced a supplementary list of appointments which are somewhat peculiar in their arrangement.

Some Beats which may need the presence of the Board of Registrars will have to do without them, while the old strongholds of Democracy are given the opportunity to register all the voters that are procurable. From Mountain Creek in the southeastern portion of the county the Board jumps to Maplesville in the western part, then on to Stanton and Riderville—all good and usually Democratic strongholds. Somehow or another the Board overlooked Cooper, Kincheon and other Beats which certainly cannot be depended upon to vote Democratic, and as this is a year of Democratic uncertainty there is nothing like taking the "Bull" by the horns, and the bull moose is equal to the struggle.

An enterprising correspondent of the Birmingham Ledger, allowing his imagination to run away with him, says that: "Judge L. H. Reynolds, of Chilton county, is sending out literature and other campaign matter in regard to his candidacy for congress from this district. "The truth of the matter is this statement is made out of whole cloth and Judge Reynolds is not sending out any literature at all, but is staying at home attending to his own business.

Judge Reynolds declined to accept the nomination for congress tendered him by the Republican Congressional convention, and doubtless is greatly surprised to learn of the above interesting item.

In this connection it is well to say that Judge Reynolds has sent in his resignation as member of the Fourth District Republican Congressional committee. The Judge is a Progressive and is proud to proclaim it. Hosts of good men all over the country are severing their connection with the old parties with which they have formerly been aligned and are joining hands with the Progressive Party, our hope for the future.

The cotton crop of the south for the year ending August 31, 1912, according to statistics complied by H. G. Hester secretary of New Orleans cotton exchange, exceeded that of the previous year by 4. 018. 331 bales, yet its money value was $107,074,825 less. This was due as much to the low grade of the crop as to the decrease in price resulting from over production. It was the lowest in grade of any crop for the past 10 years, the average being strictly low middling to middling comparing with a slight shade under strict middling last year.

Editor Union and Banner:—I am very much delighted at the move the people of Chilton county have recently made, by unanimously endorsing Roosevelt for President, I was glad to know that you had such a large crowd in the meeting of August 30th. I was very sorry that I could not be present.

I was at the meeting of the Progressives here in Birmingham the 24th, and I was very much pleased with several addresses which I heard, but especially was I pleased with the address of Mr. E. E. Calloway, who made a strong speech for Roosevelt, and I was more delighted to hear him say that the Progressive ticket in Chilton County would win by at least two to one. He said that they would "snow the Democrats under" in Chilton so deep that they would never be resurrested.

Judge S. M. Adams made a strong but conservative speech endorsing the Progressive movement. Judge L. H. Reynolds also made a speech endorsing the Progressive movement. It makes me feel good to know that old Chilton will redeem herself this fall by electing the people's ticket. I am sure that Roosevelt will be elected President in November. He seems to be gaining every day. I am associated here with men of all parties and the laboring and business people especially are for Mr. Roosevelt. It looks like the politicians, office holders and office seekers are all that will be left in the two old parties.

I have just spent my vacation at Lomax, my old home. Had a splendid time, and I am glad to find not only the Republicans and old time Populists for Mr. Roosevelt but I find a large number of Democrats supporting him, and after mixing and mingling with the people of Chilton, I agree with Mr. E. E. Calloway when he says the Roosevelt ticket will be elected two to one. I feel an interest in Chilton county because it was my old home and I still retain my citizenship there, and if nothing happens in November, I will come back to vote for Roosevelt and the county ticket. I hope the people of Chilton will do their duty, and not divide over any question that might defeat the people's ticket, thereby electing Democratic ticket.

Respectfully,
A. A. JACKSON.

Sweet Perquisite.

Candy is a perquisite of theater ushers seldom taken into account. After a Saturday matinee the enterprising usher can secure enough bonbons and chocolates to last a week. The more absorbing the play the larger the supply. At an interesting climax the emotional matinee girl forgets her candy box and lets it slide to the floor with several pieces sticking in the corners. Immediately after the performance all enterprising ushers search the house for discarded sweets.

A Mark of Devotion.

"The Grimsbys are devoted to their family interests, aren't they?"

"Yes, indeed. Why, when they secured a prize cook, the eldest son married her to keep her in the family."

THE PROGRESSIVE CONVENTION.

Chicago has been the scene of many political gatherings, but never of one like that of August 5, 6, and 7 last. The nearest approach to it was probably the convention that nominated Lincoln in 1860. Some two thousand men and women, moved by the new "Progressive" spirit, came together in that city from all parts of the country, constituting what might well be called a "committee on the State of the Union." The occasion was, of course, a political convention, and the members of the gathering had been duly elected delegtes; but how different this from the ordinary political convention. "A family reunion,,, some called it; "a prayer meeting," said others. It really wrs much like a gigantic revival meeting, with ita oldfashioned enthusiasm, its prayers, hymn-singing, patriotic songs, and all the inspiration and fervor of a great body of earnest people moved by a common cause. And such a cause—not the perfunctory ratification of a prearranged program of party bosses, with the object of winning a purely partisan victory; but the aroused determination og earnest, Godfearing citizens to make their government truly the servant of the people and their country a better place in which to live.—From "The Progresfives at Chicago," by William Menkel, in the AMERICAN REVIEW OF REVIEWS for September.

HOPE FOR WOMEN OF FIFTY

Time When She Should Be Philosophical and Prepared for Wise Old Age.

There are people today asking with all appearance of sincerity what a woman of fifty or more can do. Their confining work in the home, say these observers, is done. A common suggestion is that they be utilized in politics. This suggestion has its comical side, Miss Tarbell declares. A person who has nothing to do after fifty years of life in a business as many sided and demanding as that of a woman can hardly be expected to be worth much in a business as complicated and uncertain as politics and for which she had had no training. The notion that the woman's business is ended at fifty or sixty is fantastic in the extreme. It only ends there if she has been blind to the meaning of her own experiences; if she has never gone below the surface of her task—never seen in it anything but physical duties; has sensed none of its intimate relations to the community, none of its obligations toward those who have left her, none of those toward the oncoming generations. If it ends there she has failed to realize, too, the tremendous importance to all those who belong in her circle or who touch it of what she makes of herself, or her personal achievement.

A woman of fifty or sixty who has succeeded has come to a point of sound philosophy and serenity which is of the utmost value in the mental and spiritual development of the group to which she belongs. Life at every one of its seven stages has its peculiar harrowing experiences—hope mingles with uncertainty in youth; fear and struggle characterize early manhood; disillusionment, the question whether it is worth while, fill the years from forty to fifty, but resolute grappling with each period brings one out almost inevitably into a fine serene certainty which cannot but have its effect on those who are younger. Ripe old age—cheerful, useful, and understanding—is one of the finest influences in the world. We hang Rembrandt's or Whistler's picture of his mother on our walls that we may feel its quieting hand, the sense of peace and achievement which the picture carries. We have no better illustration of the meaning of old age.—American Magazine.

Running up and down stairs, sweeping and bending over making beds will not make a woman healthy or beautiful. She must get out of doors, walk a mile or two every day and take Chamberlain's Tablets to improve her digestion and regulate her bowels. For sale by Alred Drug Co.

CALOMEL SOMETIMES CAUSES SALIVATION

Dodson's Liver-Tone Has All the Medicinal Properties of Calomel With None of the Dangerous After-Effects.

You can get along without taking calomel yourself or giving it to your family when you can buy a substitute for it as good as Dodson's Liver-Tone. Dodson's Liver-Tone is a pure, harmless vegetable liquid that starts the liver to action just as surely as calomel does. But, unlike calomel, Dodson's Liver-Tone does not stimulate the liver to much. It cures constipation gently instead of making you more bilious than you were at first, and it can no more salivate you than a tablespoonful of maple syrup can salivate you.

Dodson's Liver-Tone has given such perfect satisfaction to every person to whom the Upchurch Drug Co., has sold a bottle that this store will give the money back to any person who buys a bottle and does not find it a perfect substitute for calomel. It is [illegible] as you [illegible] a [illegible] dose.

Defender of Apaches Debarred.

One Paris lawyer has had his name struck off the rolls because it was discovered that he acted as the regular legal adviser of the apache fraternity, from which he drew $6,600 annually in fees. One day he was engaged to defend an apache in a suburban court. His client was not satisfied with the lawyer's procedure in the case, and after a heated argument outside the court the client threw the lawyer into the River Marne.—Case and Comment.

Always a Way.

In a public washroom, where there were towels a-plenty, if anybody wanted to use that kind, Tip saw a man who had been sousing his face in cold water take his immaculately clean, very fresh-looking shirt sleeves, as he could with the cuff button links unfastened, and slowly mop his dripping face till it was dry; so there's always a way.—New York Press.

Fewer Willing to Sell Their Hair.

Owing to the fact that the young countrymen of France, under the spreading influence of the cities, are becoming more particular as to the appearance of the girls they "walk out" with, peasant girls are becoming less and less willing to sell their rich tresses to hair dealers. At the great Limoges hair fair, held in the market place of the city, there were fewer dealers present than ever before. The supply of hair is failing and prices ranged from $1.50 to $1.85 a pound.

Shock Absorber.

To absorb shocks that might destroy tungsten electric lamps suspended by cords there has been invented a wire spring with hooks at each end to engage the cord.

Get Little Sulphur From Sicily.

Immense quantities of sulphur are mined in Louisiana by pumping, and the result is that Sicily exports very little sulphur to this country, although seven or eight years ago it sent more than one hundred thousand tons per annum.

Best Treatment for a Burn.

If for no other reason, Chamberlain's Salve should be kept in every household on account of its great value in the treatment of burns. It allays the pain almost instantly, and unless the injury is a severe one, heals the parts without leaving a scar. This salve is also unequaled for chapped hands, sore nipples and diseases of the skin. Price, 25 cents. For sale by ALRED DRUG CO.

HAS BIGGEST "FAMILY BATH"

Inland Capital of Austria Made Great Bathing Resort for Its Citizens.

The Viennese, although living almost in the center of Europe, hundreds of miles away from any seaside bathing resort, are yet, owing to the enterprise of the municipality of Vienna, able to indulge in bathing on much more extensive scale than the people of any European seaside resort, with the possible exception of Ostend in the height of the summer season, says the Wide World.

Some four or five years ago the authorities of Vienna realized the great benefit that bathing on wholesale lines, so to speak, would be to the inhabitants of the city during the summer months. With this end in view they acquired a picturesque tree clad island bordered with fine stretches of sand in what is known as the "Old Danube." Here, in the course of a few months, arrangements were made for providing not only a plendid bathing place for hosts of Viennese of all classes who were unable, through lack of time or means, to take the long journey necessary to reach the nearest continental plage, but also a very interesting experiment in municipal trading, which up to the present has more than satisfied its originators.

Year by year, since its first institution some four years ago, the "Strandbad," to give this unique institution its proper name, has increased in popularity, and now, on every reasonably fine afternoon throughout the summer months from June until late in September one sees crowds of people wending their way to the floating bridge ferry by which the long, sandy island on which the Strand-bad is situated is reached.

The Stooping Bishop.

Nat C. Goodwin was defending a clergyman who had gone wrong.

"I don't condone his offense, mind you," said Mr. Goodwin. "But I want you to be sorry for him. Don't cackle and rejoice over his downfall. We are all human."

Then, in his musical and thrilling voice, the famous comedian resumed: "I know a very beautiful actress who dined one Sunday evening at a bishop's. After dinner the bishop, as he helped her to put on her cloak, stooped—stooped in more ways than one—and imprinted a kiss on her white shoulder.

"She turned and, looking at him disdainfully, she said:

"'Remember, sir, if I am an actress, I am a lady, too.'

"The bishop made a low and humble bow.

"'And will you please remember,' he said, 'if I am a bishop, I am also a man?'"

Berlin Prohibits Horse Cab.

While in most of the large cities of civilized countries the taxicab reigns practically supreme, Berlin is the first metropolis to pass a law prohibiting horse-drawn cabs from carrying fares within its jurisdiction. Such an ordinance was put in force recently and the few remaining cabbies were given notice of the death of their trade. Provision was made for the instructing of the cabmen as chauffeurs, and $150 was given as compensation for their loss of trade. This gives the taxicab drivers a monopoly, but, as the city authorities have stringent regulations covering the tolls and other matters, no trouble is expected from that source. Co-incident with this news comes the information from London that the cab situation is so bad there that a society has been formed for the relief of indigent cab drivers who are now unable to reap a living owing to the inroads taxicabs have made on their fares.

An article that has real merit should in time become popular. That such is the case with Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has been attested by many dealers. Here is one of them. H. W. Hendrickson, Ohio Falls, Ind., writes: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best for coughs, colds and croup, and is my best seller." For sale by Alred Drug Co.

ART IS WORTH CULTIVATION

The true art of being agreeable is to appear well pleased with all the company and rather to seem well entertained with them than to give entertainment to them. A man thus disposed perhaps may not have much learning, nor any wit, but if he have common sense and something friendly in his behavior it conciliates men's minds more than the brightest talents without this disposition, and when a man of such a turn comes to old age, he is almost sure to be treated with respect.

It is true, indeed, that we should not dissemble or flatter in company, but a man may be very agreeable, strictly consistent with truth and sincerity, by a prudent silence where he cannot concur, and a pleasant assent when he can. Now and then you meet with a person so exactly formed to please that he will gain upon everyone that hears or beholds him; this disposition is not merely the gift of nature, but frequently the effect of much knowledge of the world and a command over passions.

The Reason.

"Say, Pat, an' whoiy do they call loife a train of events?" "Sure, Moike, I'm ashoimed of ye. An' did ye niver hear 'tis made up of births and exits?"

$80,000,000.00 Lost Annually By Wage Earners.

Dr. Sadler estimates that about $80,000,000.00 in wages is lost annually by the American people as a direct result of colds. Lost time means lost wages, and doctoring is expensive. Use Foley's Honey and Tar Compound promptly. It will stop the cough and heal and sooth the sore and inflamed air passages. Upchurch Drug Co.
